AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

[Written originally for "Lalla Rookh" in the collected edition of Moore's works.]

THE Poem, or Romance, of "Lalla Rookh" having now reached, I understand, its twentieth edition, a short account of the origin and progress of a work which has been hitherto so very fortunate in its course may not be deemed, perhaps, superfluous or misplaced.

It was about the year 1812, that, far more through the encouraging suggestions of friends than from any confident promptings of my own ambition, I conceived the design of writing a Poem upon some Oriental subject, and of those quarto dimensions which Scott's successful publications in that form had then rendered the regular poetical standard. A negotiation on the subject was opened with the Messrs. Longman in the same year; but, from some causes which I cannot now recollect, led to no decisive result; nor was it till a year or two after, that any further steps were taken in the matter,—their house being the only one, it is right to add, with which, from first to last, I held any communication upon the subject.

On this last occasion, Mr. Perry kindly offered himself as my representative in the treaty; and, what with the friendly zeal of my negotiator on the one side, and the prompt and liberal spirit with which he was met on the other, there has seldom, I think, occurred any transaction in which Trade and Poesy have shone out so advantageously in each other's eyes. The short discussion that then took place, between the two parties, may be comprised in a very few sentences. "I am of opinion," said Mr. Perry,—enforcing his view of the case by arguments which it is not for me to cite,—"that Mr. Moore ought to receive for his Poem the largest price that has been given, in our day, for such a work." "That was," answered the Messrs. Longman, "three thousand guineas." "Exactly so," replied Mr. Perry, "and no less a sum ought he to receive."

It was then objected, and very reasonably, on the part of the firm, that they had never yet seen a single line of the Poem; and that a perusal of the work ought to be allowed to them, before they embarked so large a sum in the purchase. But, no;—the romantic view which my friend Perry took of the matter was, that this price should be given as a tribute to reputation already acquired, without any condition for a previous perusal of the new work. This high tone, I must confess, not a little startled and alarmed me; but, to the honour and glory of Romance—as well on the publishers' side as the poet's,—this very generous view of the transaction was, without any difficulty, acceded to, and the firm agreed, before we separated, that I was to receive three thousand guineas for my Poem.

At the time of this agreement, but little of the work, as it stands at present, had yet been written. But the ready confidence in my success shown by others made up for the deficiency of that requisite feeling within myself; while a strong desire not wholly to disappoint this "auguring hope" became almost a substitute for inspiration. In the year 1815, therefore, having made some progress in my task, I wrote to report the state of the work to the Messrs. Longman, adding, that I was now most willing and ready, should they desire it, to submit the manuscript for their consideration. Their answer to this offer was as follows: "We are certainly impatient for the perusal of the Poem; but solely for our gratification. Your sentiments are always honourable."

I continued to pursue my task for another year, being likewise occasionally occupied with the "Irish Melodies," two or three numbers of which made their appearance during the period employed in writing "Lalla Rookh." At length, in the year 1816, I found my work sufficiently advanced to be placed in the hands of the publishers. But the state of distress to which England was reduced, in that dismal year, by the exhausting effects of the series of wars she had just then concluded, and the general embarrassment of all classes both agricultural and commercial, rendered it a juncture the least favourable that could well be conceived for the first launch into print of so light and costly a venture as "Lalla Rookh." Feeling conscious, therefore, that under such circumstances I should act but honestly in putting it in the power of the Messrs. Longman to reconsider the terms of their engagement with me,—leaving them free to postpone, modify, or even, should such be their wish, relinquish it altogether,—I wrote them a letter to that effect, and received the following answer: "We shall be most happy in the pleasure of seeing you in February. We agree with you, indeed, that the times are most inauspicious for 'poetry and thousands'; but we believe that your poetry would do more than that of any other living poet at the present moment."

The length of time I employed in writing the few stories strung together in "Lalla Rookh" will appear, to some persons, much more than was necessary for the production of such easy and "light o' love" fictions. But, besides that I have been, at all times, a far more slow and painstaking workman than would ever be guessed, I fear, from the result, I felt that in this instance I had taken upon myself a more than ordinary responsibility, from the immense stake risked by others on my chance of success. For a long time, therefore, after the agreement had been concluded, though generally at work with a view to this task, I made but very little real progress in it; and I have still by me the beginnings of several stories continued, some of them, to the length of three or four hundred lines, which, after in vain endeavouring to mould them into shape, I threw aside, like the tale of Cambuscan, "left half-told." One of these stories, entitled "The Peri's Daughter," was meant to relate the loves of a nymph of this aërial extraction with a youth of mortal race, the rightful Prince of Ormuz, who had been, from his infancy, brought up in seclusion on the banks of the river Amou, by an aged guardian named Mohassan. The story opens with the first meeting of these destined lovers, then in their childhood; the Peri having wafted her daughter to this holy retreat, in a bright, enchanted boat, whose first appearance is thus described:—

For, down the silvery tide afar,
There came a boat, as swift and bright,
As shines, in heaven, some pilgrim-star,
That leaves its own high home, at night,
To shoot to distant shrines of light.

'It comes, it comes,' young Orian cries,
And panting to Mohassan flies.
Then, down upon the flowery grass
Reclines to see the vision pass;

With partly joy and partly fear,
To find its wondrous light so near,
And hiding oft his dazzled eyes
Among the flowers on which he lies.

. . . . . .

Within the boat a baby slept,
Like a young pearl within its shell;
While one, who seem'd of riper years,
But not of earth, or earth-like spheres,
Her watch beside the slumberer kept;
Gracefully waving, in her hand,
The feathers of some holy bird,
With which, from time to time, she stirr'd
The fragrant air, and coolly fann'd
The baby's brow, or brush'd away
The butterflies that, bright and blue
As on the mountains of Malay,
Around the sleeping infant flew.

And now the fairy boat hath stopp'd
Beside the bank,—the nymph has dropp'd
Her golden anchor in the stream.

. . . . . .

A song is sung by the Peri in approaching, of which the following forms a part:—

My child she is but half divine,
Her father sleeps in the Caspian water;
Sea-weeds twine
His funeral shrine,
But he lives again in the Peri's daughter.
Fain would I fly from mortal sight
To my own sweet bowers of Peristan;
But there, the flowers are all too bright
For the eyes of a baby born of man.
On flowers of earth her feet must tread;
So hither my light-wing'd bark hath brought her;
Stranger, spread
Thy leafiest bed,
To rest the wandering Peri's daughter.

In another of these inchoate fragments, a proud female saint, named Banou, plays a principal part; and her progress through the streets of Cufa, on the night of a great illuminated festival, I find thus described:—

It was a scene of mirth that drew
A smile from even the Saint Banou,
As, through the hush'd admiring throng,
She went with stately steps along,
And counted o'er, that all might see,
The rubies of her rosary.
But none might see the worldly smile
That lurk'd beneath her veil the while:—
Alla, forbid! for, who would wait
Her blessing at the temple's gate,—
What holy man would ever run
To kiss the ground she knelt upon,
If once, by luckless chance, he knew
She look'd and smiled as others do?
Her hands were join'd, and from each wrist
By threads of pearl and golden twist
Hung relics of the saints of yore,
And scraps of talismanic lore,—
Charms for the old, the sick, the frail,
Some made for use, and all for sale.
On either side, the crowd withdrew,
To let the Saint pass proudly through;
While turban'd heads of every hue,
Green, white, and crimson, bow'd around,
And gay tiaras touched the ground,—
As tulip-bells, when o'er their beds
The musk-wind passes, bend their heads.
Nay, some there were, among the crowd
Of Moslem heads that round her bow'd,
So fill'd with zeal by many a draught
Of Shiraz wine profanely quaff'd,
That, sinking low in reverence then,
They never rose till morn again.

There are yet two more of these unfinished sketches,

one of which extends to a much greater length than I was aware of; and, as far as I can judge from a hasty renewal of my acquaintance with it, is not incapable of being yet turned to account.

In only one of these unfinished sketches, the tale of "The Peri's Daughter," had I yet ventured to invoke that most home-felt of all my inspirations, which has lent to the story of "The Fire-Worshippers" its main attraction and interest. That it was my intention, in the concealed Prince of Ormuz, to shadow out some impersonation of this feeling, I take for granted from the prophetic words supposed to be addressed to him by his aged guardian:—

> Bright child of destiny! even now
> I read the promise on that brow,
> That tyrants shall no more defile
> The glories of the Green Sea Isle,
> But Ormuz shall again be free,
> And hail her native Lord in thee!

In none of the other fragments do I find any trace of this sort of feeling, either in the subject or the personages of the intended story; and this was the reason, doubtless, though hardly known, at the time, to myself, that, finding my subjects so slow in kindling my own sympathies, I began to despair of their ever touching the hearts of others; and felt often inclined to say:—

> 'Oh no, I have no voice or hand
> For such a song in such a land.'

Had this series of disheartening experiments been carried on much further, I must have thrown aside the work in despair. But at last, fortunately, as it proved, the thought occurred to me of founding a story on the fierce struggle so long maintained between the Ghe-

bers * or ancient Fire-Worshippers of Persia, and their haughty Moslem masters. From that moment, a new and deep interest in my whole task took possession of me. The cause of tolerance was again my inspiring theme; and the spirit that had spoken in the melodies of Ireland soon found itself at home in the East.

Having thus laid open the secrets of the workshop to account for the time expended in writing this work, I must also, in justice to my own industry, notice the pains I took in long and laboriously reading for it. To form a storehouse, as it were, of illustration purely Oriental, and so familiarize myself with its various treasures, that, as quick as Fancy required the aid of fact, in her spiritings, the memory was ready, like another Ariel, at her "strong bidding," to furnish materials for the spell-work,—such was, for a long while, the sole object of my studies; and whatever time and trouble this preparatory process may have cost me, the effects resulting from it, as far as the humble merit of truthfulness is concerned, have been such as to repay me more than sufficiently for my pains. I have not forgotten how great was my pleasure, when told by the late Sir James Mackintosh that he was once asked by Colonel W——s, the historian of British India, "whether it was true that Moore had never been in the East?" "Never," answered Mackintosh. "Well, that shows me," replied Colonel W——s, "that reading over D'Herbelot is as good as riding on the back of a camel."

* Voltaire, in his tragedy of "Les Guèbres," written with a similar under-current of meaning, was accused of having transformed his Fire-Worshippers into Jansenists. "Quelques figuristes," he says, "prétendent que les Guèbres sont les Jansenistes."

I need hardly subjoin to this lively speech, that, although D'Herbelot's valuable work was, of course, one of my manuals, I took the whole range of all such Oriental reading as was accessible to me; and became, for the time, indeed, far more conversant with all relating to that distant region, than I have ever been with the scenery, productions, or modes of life of any of those countries lying most within my reach. We know that D'Anville, though never in his life out of Paris, was able to correct a number of errors in a plan of the Troad taken by De Choiseul, on the spot; and for my own very different, as well as far inferior, purposes, the knowledge I had thus acquired of distant localities, seen only by me in my day-dreams, was no less ready and useful.

An ample reward for all this painstaking has been found in such welcome tributes as I have just now cited; nor can I deny myself the gratification of citing a few more of the same description. From another distinguished authority on Eastern subjects, the late Sir John Malcolm, I had myself the pleasure of hearing a similar opinion publicly expressed; — that eminent person, in a speech spoken by him at a Literary Fund Dinner, having remarked, that, together with those qualities of a poet which he much too partially assigned to me, was combined also "the truth of the historian."

Sir William Ouseley, another high authority, in giving his testimony to the same effect, thus notices an exception to the general accuracy for which he gives me credit: "Dazzled by the beauties of this composition ["The Fire-Worshippers"], few readers can perceive, and none surely can regret, that the poet, in his magnificent catastrophe, has forgotten, or boldly and most happily violated, the precept of Zoroaster, above noticed, which held it impious to consume any portion of a human body by fire, especially by that which glowed upon their altars." Having long lost, I fear, most of my Eastern learning, I can only cite, in defence of my catastrophe, an old Oriental tradition, which relates that Nimrod, when Abraham refused, at his command, to worship the fire, ordered him to be thrown into the midst of the flames.* A precedent so ancient for this sort of use of the worshipped element would appear, for all purposes at least of poetry, fully sufficient.

In addition to these agreeable testimonies, I have also heard, and need hardly add, with some pride and pleasure, that parts of this work have been rendered into Persian, and have found their way to Ispahan. To this fact, as I am willing to think it, allusion is made in some lively verses, written many years since, by my friend Mr. Luttrell: —

> 'I 'm told, dear Moore, your lays are sung,
> (Can it be true, you lucky man?)
> By moonlight, in the Persian tongue,
> Along the streets of Ispahan.'

That some knowledge of the work may have really reached that region appears not improbable from a passage in the "Travels" of Mr. Frazer, who says, that "being delayed for some time at a town on the shores of the Caspian, he was lucky enough to be able to amuse himself with a copy of 'Lalla Rookh,' which a Persian had lent him."

Of the description of Balbec, in "Paradise and the

* "Tradunt autem Hebræi hanc fabulam, quod Abraham in ignem missus sit, quia ignem adorare noluit."—St. Hieron, in Quæst in Genesim.

Peri," Mr. Carne, in his "Letters from the East," thus speaks: "The description in 'Lalla Rookh' of the plain and its ruins is exquisitely faithful. The minaret is on the declivity near at hand, and there wanted only the muezzin's cry to break the silence."

I shall now tax my reader's patience with but one more of these generous vouchers. Whatever of vanity there may be in citing such tributes, they show, at least, of what great value, even in poetry, is that prosaic quality, industry; since, as the reader of the foregoing pages is now fully apprised, it was in a slow and laborious collection of small facts, that the first foundations of this fanciful Romance were laid.

The friendly testimony I have just referred to appeared, some years since, in the form in which I now give it, and, if I recollect right, in the "Athenæum":—

"I embrace this opportunity of bearing my individual testimony (if it be of any value) to the extraordinary accuracy of Mr. Moore, in his topographical, antiquarian, and characteristic details, whether of costume, manners, or less changing monuments, both in his 'Lalla Rookh' and in 'The Epicurean.' It has been my fortune to read his Atlantic, Bermudean, and American Odes and Epistles, in the countries and among the people to which and to whom they related; I enjoyed also the exquisite delight of reading his 'Lalla Rookh' in Persia itself; and I have perused 'The Epicurean' while all my recollections of Egypt and its still existing wonders are as fresh as when I quitted the banks of the Nile for Arabia:—I owe it, therefore, as a debt of gratitude (though the payment is most inadequate), for the great pleasure I have derived from his productions, to bear my humble testimony to their local fidelity.—J. S. B."

Among the incidents connected with this work, I must not omit to notice the splendid Divertissement, founded upon it, which was acted at the Château Royal of Berlin, during the visit of the Grand Duke Nicholas to that capital, in the year 1822. The different stories composing the work were represented in Tableaux Vivans and songs; and among the crowd of royal and noble personages engaged in the performances, I shall mention those only who represented the principal characters, and whom I find thus enumerated in the published account of the Divertissement. *

Besides these and other leading personages, there were also brought into action, under the various denominations of Seigneurs et Dames de Bucharie, Dames de Cachemire, Seigneurs et Dames dansans à la Fête des Roses, etc., nearly 150 persons.

Of the manner and style in which the Tableaux of the different stories are described in the work from which I cite, the following account of the performance of "Paradise and the Peri" will afford some specimen:

"La décoration représentoit les portes brillantes du Paradis, entourées de nuages. Dans le premier tableau on voyoit la Péri, triste et désolée, couchée sur le seuil des portes fermées, et l'Ange de lumière qui lui adresse des consolations et des conseils. Le second représente le moment où la Péri, dans l'espoir que ce don lui ouvrira l'entrée du Paradis, recueille la dernière goutte de sang que vient de verser le jeune guerrier indien. . . .

"La Péri et l'Ange de lumière répondoient pleinement à l'image et à l'idée qu'on est tenté de se faire de ces deux individus, et l'impression qu'a faite généralement la suite des tableaux de cet épisode délicat et intéressant est loin de s'effacer de notre souvenir."

In this grand fête, it appears, originated the translation of "Lalla Rookh" into German* verse, by the Baron de la Motte Fouqué; and the circumstances which led him to undertake the task are described by himself in a Dedicatory Poem to the Empress of Russia, which he has prefixed to his translation. As soon as the performance, he tells us, had ended, Lalla Rookh (the Empress herself) exclaimed, with a sigh, "Is it, then, all over? Are we now at the close of all that has given us so much delight? and lives there no poet who will impart to others, and to future times, some notion of the happiness we have enjoyed this evening?" On hearing this appeal, a Knight of Cashmere (who is no other than the poetical Baron himself) comes forward and promises to attempt to present to the world "the Poem itself in the measure of the original":—whereupon Lalla Rookh, it is added, approvingly smiled.

*Since this was written, another translation of "Lalla Rookh" into German verse has been made by Theodor Oelckers (Leipzig, Tauchnitz).

LALLA ROOKH.

In the eleventh year of the reign of Aurungzebe, Abdalla, King of the Lesser Bucharia, a lineal descendant from the Great Zingis, having abdicated the throne in favour of his son, set out on a pilgrimage to the Shrine of the Prophet; and passing into India through the delightful valley of Cashmere, rested for a short time at Delhi on his way. He was entertained by Aurungzebe in a style of magnificent hospitality, worthy alike of the visitor and the host, and was afterwards escorted with the same splendour to Surat, where he embarked for Arabia. During the stay of the Royal Pilgrim at Delhi, a marriage was agreed upon between the Prince, his son, and the youngest daughter of the Emperor, Lalla Rookh;—a Princess described by the poets of her time as more beautiful than Leila, Shirine, Dewildé, or any of those heroines whose names and loves embellish the songs of Persia and Hindostan. It was intended that the nuptials should be celebrated at Cashmere; where the young King, as soon as the cares of empire would permit, was to meet, for the first time, his lovely bride, and, after a few months' repose in that enchanting valley, conduct her over the snowy hills into Bucharia.

The day of Lalla Rookh's departure from Delhi was as splendid as sunshine and pageantry could make it. The bazaars and baths were all covered with the richest tapestry; hundreds of gilded barges upon the Jumna floated with their banners shining in the water; while through the streets groups of beautiful children went strewing the most delicious flowers around, as in that Persian festival called the Scattering of the Roses; till every part of the city was as fragrant as if a caravan of musk from Khoten had passed through it. The Princess, having taken leave of her kind father (who at parting hung a cornelian of Yemen round her neck, on which was inscribed a verse from the Koran) and having sent a considerable present to the Fakirs, who kept up the Perpetual Lamp in her sister's tomb, meekly ascended the palankeen prepared for her; and, while Aurungzebe stood to take a last look from his balcony, the procession moved slowly on the road to Lahore.

Seldom had the Eastern world seen a cavalcade so superb. From the gardens in the suburbs to the Imperial palace, it was one unbroken line of splendour. The gallant appearance of the Rajahs and Mogul Lords, distinguished by those insignia of the Emperor's favour, the feathers of the egret of Cashmere in their turbans, and the small silver-rimmed kettledrums at the bows of their saddles; — the costly armour of their cavaliers, who vied, on this occasion, with the guards of the great Keder

Khan, in the brightness of their silver battle-axes and the massiness of their maces of gold;—the glittering of the gilt pine-apples on the tops of the palankeens;—the embroidered trappings of the elephants, bearing on their backs small turrets in the shape of little antique temples, within which the Ladies of Lalla Rookh lay as it were enshrined;—the rose-coloured veils of the Princess's own sumptuous litter, at the front of which a fair young female slave sat fanning her through the curtains, with feathers of the Argus pheasant's wing;—and the lovely troop of Tartarian and Cashmerian maids of honour, whom the young King had sent to accompany his bride, and who rode on each side of the litter, upon small Arabian horses;—all was brilliant, tasteful, and magnificent, and pleased even the critical and fastidious Fadladeen, Great Nazir or Chamberlain of the Haram, who was borne in his palankeen immediately after the Princess, and considered himself not the least important personage of the pageant.

Fadladeen was a judge of everything,—from the pencilling of a Circassian's eyelids to the deepest questions of science and literature; from the mixture of a conserve of rose-leaves to the composition of an epic poem; and such influence had his opinion upon the various tastes of the day, that all the cooks and poets of Delhi stood in awe of him. His political conduct and opinions were founded upon that line of Sadi,—"Should the Prince at noon-day say, It is night, declare that you behold the moon and stars."—And his zeal for religion, of which Aurungzebe was a munificent protector, was about as disinterested as that of the goldsmith who fell in love with the diamond eyes of the Idol of Jaghernaut.

During the first days of their journey, Lalla Rookh, who had passed all her life within the shadow of the Royal Gardens of Delhi, found enough in the beauty of the scenery through which they passed to interest her mind and delight her imagination; and when at evening or in the heat of the day, they turned off from the high road to those retired and romantic places which had been selected for her encampments, sometimes on the banks of a small rivulet, as clear as the waters of the Lake of Pearl; sometimes under the sacred shade of a Banyan tree, from which the view opened upon a glade covered with antelopes; and often in those hidden, embowered spots, described by one from the Isles of the West, as "places of melancholy, delight, and safety, where all the company around were wild peacocks and turtle-doves"; — she felt a charm in these scenes, so lovely and so new to her, which, for a time, made her indifferent to every other amusement. But Lalla Rookh was young, and the young love variety; nor could the conversation of her Ladies and the Great Chamberlain Fadladeen (the only persons, of course, admitted to her pavilion) sufficiently enliven those many vacant hours, which were devoted neither to the pillow nor the palankeen. There was a little Persian slave who sung sweetly to the Vina, and who, now and then, lulled the Princess to sleep with the ancient ditties of her country, about the loves of Wamak and Ezra, the fair-haired Zal and his mistress Rodahver; not forgetting the combat of Rustam with the terrible White Demon. At other times she was amused by those graceful dancing-girls of Delhi, who had been permitted by the Bramins of the Great Pagoda to attend her, much to the horror of the good Mussulman Fadladeen, who could see nothing graceful or agreeable in idolaters, and to whom the very tinkling of their golden anklets was an abomination.

But these and many other diversions were repeated till they lost all their charm, and the nights and noon-days were beginning to move heavily, when, at length, it was recollected that among the attendants sent by the bridegroom, was a young poet of Cashmere, much celebrated throughout the valley for his manner of reciting the stories of the East, on whom his Royal Master had conferred the privilege of being admitted to the pavilion of the Princess, that he might help to beguile the tediousness of the journey by some of his most agreeable recitals. At the mention of the poet, Fadladeen elevated his critical eyebrows, and having refreshed his faculties with a dose of that delicious opium which is distilled from the black poppy of the Thebais, gave orders for the minstrel to be forthwith introduced into the presence.

The Princess, who had once in her life seen a poet from behind the screens of gauze in her Father's hall, and had conceived from that specimen no very favourable ideas of the Caste, expected but little in this new exhibition to interest her;—she felt inclined, however, to alter her opinion on the very first appearance of Feramorz. He was a youth about Lalla Rookh's own age, and graceful as that idol of women, Crishna,—such as he appears to their young imaginations, heroic, beautiful, breathing music from his very eyes, and exalting the religion of his worshippers into love. His dress was simple, yet not without some marks of costliness; and the ladies of the Princess were not long in discovering that the cloth which encircled his high Tartarian cap was of the most delicate kind that the shawl-goats of Tibet supply. Here and there, too, over his vest, which was confined by a flowered girdle of Kashan, hung strings of fine pearl, disposed with an air of studied negligence;—nor did the exquisite embroidery of his sandals escape the observation of these fair critics; who, however they might give way to Fadladeen upon the unimportant topics of religion and government, had the spirit of martyrs in everything relating to such momentous matters as jewels and embroidery.

For the purpose of relieving the pauses of recitation by music, the young Cashmerian held in his hand a kitar — such as, in old times, the Arab maids of the West used to listen to by moonlight in the gardens of the Alhambra; — and having premised, with much humility, that the story he was about to relate was founded on the adventures of that Veiled Prophet of Khorassan who, in the year of the Hegira 163, created such alarm throughout the Eastern Empire, made an obeisance to the Princess, and thus began.

VEILED PROPHET OF KHORASSAN.

In that delightful Province of the Sun,
The first of Persian lands he shines upon,
Where all the loveliest children of his beam,
Flowerets and fruits, blush over every stream,
And fairest of all streams, the Murga roves
Among Merou's bright palaces and groves,—
There on that throne, to which the blind belief
Of millions raised him, sat the Prophet-Chief,
The Great Mokanna. O'er his features hung
The Veil, the Silver Veil, which he had flung
In mercy there, to hide from mortal sight
His dazzling brow, till man could bear its light.
For, far less luminous, his votaries said,
Were even the gleams, miraculously shed
O'er Moussa's cheek, when down the Mount he trod,
All glowing from the presence of his God!

On either side, with ready hearts and hands,
His chosen guard of bold Believers stands;
Young fire-eyed disputants, who deem their swords,
On points of faith, more eloquent than words;
And such their zeal, there's not a youth with brand
Uplifted there, but, at the Chief's command,
Would make his own devoted heart its sheath,

And bless the lips that doom'd so dear a death!
In hatred to the Caliph's hue of night,
Their vesture, helms and all, is snowy white;
Their weapons various — some equipp'd, for speed,
With javelins of the light Kathaian reed;
Or bows of buffalo-horn and shining quivers
Fill'd with the stems that bloom on Iran's rivers;
While some, for war's more terrible attacks,
Wield the huge mace and ponderous battle-axe;
And as they wave aloft in morning's beam
The milk-white plumage of their helms, they seem Like a chenar-tree grove, when Winter throws
O'er all its tufted heads his feathering snows.

Between the porphyry pillars, that uphold
The rich moresque-work of the roof of gold,
Aloft the Haram's curtain'd galleries rise,
Where, through the silken network, glancing eyes,
From time to time, like sudden gleams that glow
Through autumn clouds, shine o'er the pomp below.
What impious tongue, ye blushing saints, would dare
To hint that aught but Heaven hath placed you there?
Or that the loves of this light world could bind,
In their gross chain, your Prophet's soaring mind?
No—wrongful thought!—commission'd from above
To people Eden's bowers with shapes of love,
(Creatures so bright, that the same lips and eyes
They wear on earth will serve in Paradise,)
There to recline among Heaven's native maids,
And crown the Elect with bliss that never fades —

Well hath the Prophet-Chief his bidding done;
And every beauteous race beneath the sun,
From those who kneel at Brahma's burning founts,
To the fresh nymphs bounding o'er Yemen's mounts;
From Persia's eyes of full and fawn-like ray
To the small, half-shut glances of Kathay;
And Georgia's bloom, and Azab's darker smiles,
And the gold ringlets of the Western Isles;
All, all are there;—each Land its flower hath given,
To form that fair young Nursery for Heaven!

But why this pageant now? this arm'd array?
What triumph crowds the rich Divan to-day
With turban'd heads, of every hue and race,
Bowing before that veil'd and awful face,
Like tulip-beds, of different shape and dyes,
Bending beneath the invisible West-wind's sighs?
What new-made mystery now, for Faith to sign,
And blood to seal, as genuine and divine,
What dazzling mimickry of God's own power
Hath the bold Prophet plann'd to grace this hour?

Not such the pageant now, though not less proud;
Yon warrior youth, advancing from the crowd,
With silver bow, with belt of broider'd crape,
And fur-bound bonnet of Bucharian shape,
So fiercely beautiful in form and eye,
Like war's wild planet in a summer sky,—
That youth to-day — a proselyte, worth hordes
Of cooler spirits and less practised swords —

Is come to join, all bravery and belief,
The creed and standard of the heaven-sent Chief.

Though few his years, the West already knows
Young Azim's fame;—beyond the Olympian snows,
Ere manhood darken'd o'er his downy cheek,
O'erwhelm'd in fight and captive to the Greek,
He linger'd there, till peace dissolved his chains;—
Oh, who could, even in bondage, tread the plains
Of glorious Greece, nor feel his spirit rise
Kindling within him? who, with heart and eyes,
Could walk where Liberty had been, nor see
The shining footprints of her Deity,
Nor feel those godlike breathings in the air,
Which mutely told her spirit had been there?
Not he, that youthful warrior,—no, too well
For his soul's quiet work'd the awakening spell;
And now, returning to his own dear land,
Full of those dreams of good that, vainly grand,
Haunt the young heart,—proud views of human-kind,
Of men to gods exalted and refined,—
False views, like that horizon's fair deceit,
Where earth and heaven but seem, alas, to meet!—
Soon as he heard an Arm Divine was raised
To right the nations, and beheld, emblazed
On the white flag Mokanna's host unfurl'd,
Those words of sunshine, 'Freedom to the World,'
At once his faith, his sword, his soul obey'd
The inspiring summons; every chosen blade
That fought beneath that banner's sacred text

Seem'd doubly edged, for this world and the next;
And ne'er did Faith with her smooth bandage bind
Eyes more devoutly willing to be blind,
In virtue's cause; — never was soul inspired
With livelier trust in what it most desired,
Than his, the enthusiast there, who kneeling, pale
With pious awe, before that Silver Veil,
Believes the form, to which he bends his knee,
Some pure, redeeming angel, sent to free
This fetter'd world from every bond and stain,
And bring its primal glories back again!

Low as young Azim knelt, that motley crowd
Of all earth's nations sunk the knee and bow'd,
With shouts of 'Alla!' echoing long and loud;
While high in air, above the Prophet's head,
Hundreds of banners, to the sunbeam spread,
Waved, like the wings of the white birds that fan
The flying throne of star-taught Soliman.
Then thus he spoke: — 'Stranger, though new the frame
Thy soul inhabits now, I've tracked its flame
For many an age, in every chance and change
Of that existence, through whose varied range,—
As through a torch-race where, from hand to hand,
The flying youths transmit their shining brand,—
From frame to frame the unextinguish'd soul
Rapidly passes, till it reach the goal!

'Nor think 'tis only the gross Spirits, warm'd

With duskier fire and for earth's medium form'd,
That run this course; — Beings the most divine
Thus deign through dark mortality to shine.
Such was the Essence that in Adam dwelt,
To which all Heaven, except the Proud One, knelt:
Such the refined Intelligence that glow'd
In Moussa's frame, — and, thence descending, flow'd
Through many a Prophet's breast; — in Issa shone,
And in Mohammed burn'd; till, hastening on,
(As a bright river that, from fall to fall
In many a maze descending, bright through all,
Finds some fair region where, each labyrinth past,
In one full lake of light it rests at last!)
That Holy Spirit, settling calm and free
From lapse or shadow, centres all in me!'

Again, throughout the assembly, at these words,
Thousands of voices rung: the warriors' swords
Were pointed up to heaven; a sudden wind
In the open banners play'd, and from behind
Those Persian hangings that but ill could screen
The Haram's loveliness, white hands were seen
Waving embroider'd scarves, whose motion gave
A perfume forth; — like those the Houris wave
When beckoning to their bowers the immortal Brave.

'But these,' pursued the Chief, 'are truths sublime,
That claim a holier mood and calmer time
Than earth allows us now; — this sword must first
The darkling prison-house of Mankind burst,

Ere Peace can visit them, or Truth let in
Her wakening daylight on a world of sin.
But then, celestial warriors, then, when all
Earth's shrines and thrones before our banner fall;
When the glad Slave shall at these feet lay down
His broken chain, the tyrant Lord his crown,
The Priest his book, the Conqueror his wreath,
And from the lips of Truth one mighty breath
Shall, like a whirlwind, scatter in its breeze
That whole dark pile of human mockeries;—
Then shall the reign of Mind commence on earth,
And starting fresh, as from a second birth,
Man, in the sunshine of the world's new spring,
Shall walk transparent, like some holy thing!
Then, too, your Prophet from his angel brow
Shall cast the Veil that hides its splendours now,
And gladden'd Earth shall, through her wide expanse,
Bask in the glories of this countenance!
For thee, young warrior, welcome!—thou hast yet
Some tasks to learn, some frailties to forget,
Ere the white war-plume o'er thy brow can wave;—
But, once mine own, mine all till in the grave!'

The pomp is at an end—the crowds are gone—
Each ear and heart still haunted by the tone
Of that deep voice, which thrill'd like Alla's own!
The Young all dazzled by the plumes and lances,
The glittering throne, and Haram's half-caught glances:
The Old deep pondering on the promised reign

Of peace and truth; and all the female train
Ready to risk their eyes, could they but gaze
A moment on that brow's miraculous blaze!

But there was one, among the chosen maids,
Who blush'd behind the gallery's silken shades,
One, to whose soul the pageant of to-day
Has been like death;—you saw her pale dismay,
Ye wondering sisterhood, and heard the burst
Of exclamation from her lips, when first
She saw that youth, too well, too dearly known,
Silently kneeling at the Prophet's throne.

Ah, Zelica! there was a time, when bliss
Shone o'er thine heart from every look of his;
When but to see him, hear him, breathe the air
In which he dwelt, was thy soul's fondest prayer;
When round him hung such a perpetual spell,
Whate'er he did none ever did so well.
Too happy days! when, if he touch'd a flower
Or gem of thine, 't was sacred from that hour:
When thou didst study him till every tone
And gesture and dear look became thine own,—
Thy voice like his, the changes of his face
In thine reflected with still lovelier grace:
Like echo, sending back sweet music, fraught
With twice the aërial sweetness it had brought!
Yet now he comes,—brighter than even he
E'er beam'd before,—but ah! not bright for thee;
No—dread, unlook'd for, like a visitant

From the other world, he comes as if to haunt
Thy guilty soul with dreams of lost delight,
Long lost to all but memory's aching sight;—
Sad dreams! as when the Spirit of our Youth
Returns in sleep, sparkling with all the truth
And innocence once ours, and leads us back,
In mournful mockery, o'er the shining track
Of our young life, and points out every ray
Of hope and peace we 've lost upon the way!

Once happy pair!—in proud Bokhara's groves,
Who had not heard of their first youthful loves?
Born by that ancient flood, which from its spring
In the Dark Mountains swiftly wandering,
Enrich'd by every pilgrim brook that shines
With relics from Bucharia's ruby mines,
And lending to the Caspian half its strength,
In the cold Lake of Eagles sinks at length;—
There, on the banks of that bright river born,
The flowers that hung above its wave at morn
Bless'd not the waters, as they murmur'd by,
With holier scent and lustre, than the sigh
And virgin-glance of first affection cast
Upon their youth's smooth current, as it pass'd!
But war disturb'd this vision,—far away
From her fond eyes summon'd to join the array
Of Persia's warriors on the hills of Thrace,
The youth exchanged his sylvan dwelling-place
For the rude tent and war-field's deathful clash;
His Zelica's sweet glances for the flash

Of Grecian wild-fire, and Love's gentle chains
For bleeding bondage on Byzantium's plains.

Month after month, in widowhood of soul
Drooping, the maiden saw two summers roll
Their suns away — but ah! how cold and dim
Even summer suns, when not beheld with him!
From time to time ill-omen'd rumours came,
Like spirit-tongues muttering the sick man's name,
Just ere he dies: — at length those sounds of dread
Fell withering on her soul, 'Azim is dead!'
O Grief, beyond all other griefs, when fate
First leaves the young heart lone and desolate
In the wide world, without that only tie
For which it loved to live or fear'd to die; —
Lorn as the hung-up lute, that ne'er hath spoken
Since the sad day its master-chord was broken!
Fond maid, the sorrow of her soul was such,
Even reason sunk, — blighted beneath its touch:
And though, ere long, her sanguine spirit rose
Above the first dead pressure of its woes,
Though health and bloom return'd, the delicate chain
Of thought, once tangled, never clear'd again.
Warm, lively, soft as in youth's happiest day,
The mind was still all there, but turn'd astray; —
A wandering bark, upon whose pathway shone
All stars of heaven, except the guiding one!
Again she smiled, nay, much and brightly smiled,
But 't was a lustre, strange, unreal, wild;
And when she sung to her lute's touching strain,

'T was like the notes, half ecstasy, half pain,
The bulbul utters, ere her soul depart,
When, vanquish'd by some minstrel's powerful art,
She dies upon the lute whose sweetness broke her heart!

Such was the mood in which that mission found
Young Zelica,—that mission, which around
The Eastern world, in every region blest
With woman's smile, sought out its loveliest,
To grace that galaxy of lips and eyes
Which the Veil'd Prophet destined for the skies:
And such quick welcome as a spark receives
Dropp'd on a bed of autumn's wither'd leaves,
Did every tale of these enthusiasts find
In the wild maiden's sorrow-blighted mind.
All fire at once the maddening zeal she caught;
Elect of Paradise! blest, rapturous thought!
Predestined bride, in heaven's eternal dome,
Of some brave youth—ha! durst they say 'of some'?
No—of the one, one only object traced
In her heart's core too deep to be effaced;
The one whose memory, fresh as life, is twined
With every broken link of her lost mind;
Whose image lives, though Reason's self be wreck'd,
Safe 'mid the ruins of her intellect!

Alas, poor Zelica! it needed all
The fantasy which held thy mind in thrall,
To see in that gay Haram's glowing maids

A sainted colony for Eden's shades;
Or dream that he, of whose unholy flame
Thou wert too soon the victim, shining came
From Paradise, to people its pure sphere
With souls like thine, which he hath ruin'd here!
No — had not Reason's light totally set,
And left thee dark, thou hadst an amulet
In the loved image, graven on thy heart,
Which would have saved thee from the tempter's art,
And kept alive, in all its bloom of breath,
That purity whose fading is love's death! —
But lost, inflamed, — a restless zeal took place
Of the mild virgin's still and feminine grace;
First of the Prophet's favourites, — proudly first
In zeal and charms, — too well the Impostor nursed
Her soul's delirium, in whose active flame,
Thus lighting up a young, luxuriant frame,
He saw more potent sorceries to bind
To his dark yoke the spirits of mankind,
More subtile chains than hell itself e'er twined.
No art was spared, no witchery; — all the skill
His demons taught him was employ'd to fill
Her mind with gloom and ecstasy by turns —
That gloom, through which Frenzy but fiercer burns;
That ecstasy, which from the depth of sadness
Glares like the maniac's moon, whose light is madness.

'T was from a brilliant banquet, where the sound
Of poesy and music breathed around,
Together picturing to her mind and ear

The glories of that heaven, her destined sphere,
Where all was pure, where every stain that lay
Upon the spirit's light should pass away,
And, realizing more than youthful love
E'er wish'd or dream'd, she should forever rove
Through fields of fragrance by her Azim's side,
His own bless'd, purified, eternal bride!—
'T was from a scene, a witching trance like this,
He hurried her away, yet breathing bliss,
To the dim charnel-house;—through all its steams
Of damp and death, led only by those gleams
Which foul Corruption lights, as with design
To show the gay and proud she too can shine!—
And, passing on through upright ranks of Dead,
Which to the maiden, doubly crazed by dread,
Seem'd, thro' the bluish death-light round them cast,
To move their lips in mutterings as she pass'd,—
There, in that awful place, when each had quaff'd
And pledged in silence such a fearful draught,
Such—oh, the look and taste of that red bowl
Will haunt her till she dies!—he bound her soul
By a dark oath, in hell's own language framed,
Never, while earth his mystic presence claim'd,
While the blue arch of day hung o'er them both,
Never, by that all-imprecating oath,
In joy or sorrow from his side to sever.—
She swore, and the wide charnel echoed, 'Never, never!'

From that dread hour, entirely, wildly given

To him, and—she believed, lost maid!—to Heaven,
Her brain, her heart, her passions all inflamed,
How proud she stood, when in full Haram named
The Priestess of the Faith! —how flash'd her eyes
With light, alas! that was not of the skies,
When round, in trances only less than hers,
She saw the Haram kneel, her prostrate worshippers!
Well might Mokanna think that form alone
Had spells enough to make the world his own: —
Light, lovely limbs, to which the spirit's play
Gave motion, airy as the dancing spray,
When from its stem the small bird wings away;
Lips in whose rosy labyrinth, when she smiled,
The soul was lost; and blushes, swift and wild
As are the momentary meteors sent
Across the uncalm but beauteous firmament.
And then her look — oh, where's the heart so wise
Could unbewilder'd meet those matchless eyes?
Quick, restless, strange, but exquisite withal,
Like those of angels, just before their fall;
Now shadow'd with the shames of earth — now crost
By glimpses of the heaven her heart had lost;
In every glance there broke, without control,
The flashes of a bright but troubled soul,
Where sensibility still wildly play'd,
Like lightning, round the ruins it had made!

And such was now young Zelica — so changed
From her who, some years since, delighted ranged
The almond groves that shade Bokhara's tide,

All life and bliss, with Azim by her side!
So alter'd was she now, this festal day,
When, 'mid the proud Divan's dazzling array,
The vision of that Youth whom she had loved,
Had wept as dead, before her breathed and moved;
When, bright, she thought, as if from Eden's track
But half-way trodden, he had wander'd back
Again to earth, glistening with Eden's light,
Her beauteous Azim shone before her sight.

O Reason! who shall say what spells renew,
When least we look for it, thy broken clew!
Through what small vistas o'er the darken'd brain
Thy intellectual day-beam bursts again;
And how, like forts, to which beleaguerers win
Unhoped-for entrance through some friend within,
One clear idea, waken'd in the breast
By memory's magic, lets in all the rest!
Would it were thus, unhappy girl, with thee!
But though light came, it came but partially;
Enough to show the maze in which thy sense
Wander'd about,—but not to guide it thence;
Enough to glimmer o'er the yawning wave,
But not to point the harbor which might save.
Hours of delight and peace, long left behind,
With that dear form came rushing o'er her mind;
But oh, to think how deep her soul had gone
In shame and falsehood since those moments shone!
And then, her oath—there madness lay again,
And, shuddering, back she sunk into her chain

Of mental darkness, as if blest to flee
From light, whose every glimpse was agony!
Yet, one relief this glance of former years
Brought, mingled with its pain,—tears, floods of tears,
Long frozen at her heart, but now like rills
Let loose in spring-time from the snowy hills,
And gushing warm, after a sleep of frost,
Through valleys where their flow had long been lost.

Sad and subdued, for the first time her frame
Trembled with horror, when the summons came (A summons proud and rare, which all but she,
And she till now, had heard with ecstasy)
To meet Mokanna at his place of prayer,
A garden oratory, cool and fair,
By the stream's side, where still at close of day
The Prophet of the Veil retired to pray;
Sometimes alone — but, oftener far, with one,
One chosen nymph to share his orison.

Of late none found such favour in his sight
As the young Priestess; and though, since that night
When the death-caverns echoed every tone
Of the dire oath that made her all his own,
The Imposter, sure of his infatuate prize,
Had more than once thrown off his soul's disguise,
And utter'd such unheavenly, monstrous things,
As even across the desperate wanderings
Of a weak intellect, whose lamp was out,
Threw startling shadows of dismay and doubt,

Yet zeal, ambition, her tremendous vow,
The thought, still haunting her, of that bright brow,
Whose blaze, as yet from mortal eye conceal'd,
Would soon, proud triumph! be to her reveal'd,
To her alone; — and then the hope, most dear,
Most wild of all, that her transgression here
Was but a passage through Earth's grosser fire,
From which the spirit would at last aspire,
Even purer than before: as perfumes rise
Thro' flame and smoke, most welcome to the skies;
And that when Azim's fond, divine embrace
Should circle her in heaven, no darkening trace
Would on that bosom he once loved remain,
But all be bright, be pure, be his again! —
These were the wildering dreams, whose curst deceit
Had chain'd her soul beneath the tempter's feet,
And made her think even damning falsehood sweet.
But now that Shape, which had appall'd her view,
That Semblance — oh, how terrible, if true! —
Which came across her frenzy's full career
With shock of consciousness, cold, deep, severe,
As when, in northern seas, at midnight dark,
An isle of ice encounters some swift bark,
And, startling all its wretches from their sleep,
By one cold impulse hurls them to the deep;
So came that shock not frenzy's self could bear,
And waking up each long-lull'd image there,
But check'd her headlong soul, to sink it in despair!

Wan and dejected, through the evening dusk,

She now went slowly to that small kiosk,
Where, pondering alone his impious schemes,
Mokanna waited her: too rapt in dreams
Of the fair-ripening future's rich success,
To heed the sorrow, pale and spiritless,
That sat upon his victim's downcast brow,
Or mark how slow her step, how alter'd now
From the quick, ardent Priestess, whose light bound
Came like a spirit's o'er the unechoing ground,—
From that wild Zelica, whose every glance
Was thrilling fire, whose every thought a trance!

Upon his couch the Veil'd Mokanna lay,
While lamps around — not such as lend their ray,
Glimmering and cold, to those who nightly pray
In holy Koom, or Mecca's dim arcades,
But brilliant, soft, such lights as lovely maids
Look loveliest in,— shed their luxurious glow
Upon his mystic Veil's white glittering flow.
Beside him, 'stead of beads and books of prayer,
Which the world fondly thought he mused on there,
Stood vases, fill'd with Kishmee's golden wine,
And the red weepings of the Shiraz vine;
Of which his curtain'd lips full many a draught
Took zealously, as if each drop they quaff'd,
Like Zemzem's Spring of Holiness, had power
To freshen the soul's virtues into flower!
And still he drank and ponder'd, nor could see
The approaching maid, so deep his reverie;
At length, with fiendish laugh, like that which broke

From Eblis at the Fall of Man, he spoke:
'Yes, ye vile race, for hell's amusement given,
Too mean for earth, yet claiming kin with heaven:
God's images, forsooth! such Gods as he
Whom India serves, the monkey deity;
Ye creatures of a breath, proud things of clay,
To whom if Lucifer, as grandams say,
Refused, though at the forfeit of heaven's light,
To bend in worship, Lucifer was right!
Soon shall I plant this foot upon the neck
Of your foul race, and without fear or check,
Luxuriating in hate, avenge my shame,
My deep-felt, long-nurst loathing of man's name;
Soon at the head of myriads, blind and fierce
As hooded falcons, through the universe
I 'll sweep my darkening, desolating way,
Weak man my instrument, curst man my prey!

'Ye wise, ye learn'd, who grope your dull way on
By the dim twinkling gleams of ages gone,
Like superstitious thieves, who think the light
From dead men's marrow guides them best at night,
Ye shall have honours, wealth,—yes, Sages, yes!
I know, grave fools, your wisdom's nothingness;
Undazzled it can track yon starry sphere,
But a gilt stick, a bauble, blinds it here.
How I shall laugh, when trumpeted along
In lying speech and still more lying song,
By these learn'd slaves, the meanest of the throng;
Their wits bought up, their wisdom shrunk so small,

A sceptre's puny point can wield it all!

'Ye, too, believers of incredible creeds,
Whose faith enshrines the monsters which it breeds:
Who, bolder even than Nemrod, think to rise,
By nonsense heap'd on nonsense, to the skies;
Ye shall have miracles, ay, sound ones too,
Seen, heard, attested,— everything but true.
Your preaching zealots, too inspired to seek
One grace of meaning for the things they speak;
Your martyrs, ready to shed out their blood
For truths too heavenly to be understood;
And your State Priests, sole vendors of the lore
That works salvation,— as, on Ava's shore,
Where none but priests are privileged to trade
In that best marble of which gods are made;
They shall have mysteries — ay, precious stuff
For knaves to thrive by — mysteries enough;
Dark, tangled doctrines, dark as fraud can weave,
Which simple votaries shall on trust receive,
While craftier feign belief, till they believe.
A Heaven, too, ye must have, ye lords of dust,
A splendid Paradise, pure souls, ye must:
That Prophet ill sustains his holy call
Who finds not heavens to suit the tastes of all;
Houris for boys, omniscience for sages,
And wings and glories for all ranks and ages.
Vain things! as lust or vanity inspires,
The Heaven of each is but what each desires;
And, soul or sense, whate'er the object be,

Man would be man to all eternity!
So let him — Eblis! grant this crowning curse,
But keep him what he is, no Hell were worse.'

'O my lost soul!' exclaim'd the shuddering maid,
Whose ears had drunk like poison all he said;
Mokanna started — not abash'd, afraid,—
He knew no more of fear than one who dwells
Beneath the tropics knows of icicles!
But, in those dismal words that reach'd his ear,
'O my lost soul!' there was a sound so drear,
So like that voice, among the sinful dead,
In which the legend o'er Hell's Gate is read,
That, new as 'twas from her whom nought could dim
Or sink till now, it startled even him.

'Ha, my fair Priestess!'— thus, with ready wile,
The impostor turn'd to greet her—'thou whose smile
Hath inspiration in its rosy beam
Beyond the Enthusiast's hope or Prophet's dream!
Light of the faith! who twin'st religion's zeal
So close with love's, men know not which they feel:
Nor which to sigh for, in their trance of heart,
The heaven thou preachest or the heaven thou art!
What should I be without thee? without thee
How dull were power, how joyless victory!
Though borne by angels, if that smile of thine
Bless'd not my banner, 't were but half divine.
But why so mournful, child? those eyes, that shone
All life last night — what! — is their glory gone?

Come, come — this morn's fatigue hath made them pale,
They want rekindling: suns themselves would fail,
Did not their comets bring, as I to thee,
From light's own fount supplies of brilliancy.
Thou seest this cup — no juice of earth is here,
But the pure waters of that upper sphere
Whose rills o'er ruby beds and topaz flow,
Catching the gem's bright colour as they go.
Nightly my Genii come and fill these urns —
Nay, drink — in every drop life's essence burns;
'T will make that soul all fire, those eyes all light —
Come, come, I want thy loveliest smiles to-night: —
There is a youth — why start? thou saw'st him then;
Look'd he not nobly? such the godlike men
Thou 'lt have to woo thee in the bowers above;
Though he, I fear, hath thoughts too stern for love,
Too ruled by that cold enemy of bliss
The world calls virtue — we must conquer this;
Nay, shrink not, pretty sage! 't is not for thee
To scan the mazes of Heaven's mystery:
The steel must pass through fire, ere it can yield
Fit instruments for mighty hands to wield.
This very night I mean to try the art
Of powerful beauty on that warrior's heart.
All that my Haram boasts of bloom and wit,
Of skill and charms most rare and exquisite,
Shall tempt the boy; — young Mirzala's blue eyes,
Whose sleepy lid like snow on violets lies;
Arouya's cheeks, warm as a spring-day sun,

And lips that, like the seal of Solomon,
Have magic in their pressure; Zeba's lute,
And Lilla's dancing feet, that gleam and shoot
Rapid and white as sea-birds o'er the deep—
All shall combine their witching powers to steep
My convert's spirit in that softening trance,
From which to heaven is but the next advance;
That glowing, yielding fusion of the breast,
On which Religion stamps her image best.
But hear me, Priestess! Tho' each nymph of these
Hath some peculiar, practised power to please,
Some glance or step which, at the mirror tried,
First charms herself, then all the world beside;
There still wants one, to make the victory sure,
One who in every look joins every lure;
Thro' whom all beauty's beams concentred pass,
Dazzling and warm, as thro' love's burning-glass;
Whose gentle lips persuade without a word,
Whose words, even when unmeaning, are adored,
Like inarticulate breathings from a shrine,
Which our faith takes for granted are divine!
Such is the nymph we want, all warmth and light,
To crown the rich temptations of to-night:
Such the refined enchantress that must be
This hero's vanquisher,—and thou art she!'

With her hands clasp'd, her lips apart and pale,
The maid had stood, gazing upon the Veil
From which these words, like south winds through a fence

Of Kerzrah flowers, came fill'd with pestilence;
So boldly utter'd, too! as if all dread
Of frowns from her, of virtuous frowns, were fled,
And the wretch felt assured that, once plunged in,
Her woman's soul would know no pause in sin!

At first, though mute she listen'd, like a dream
Seem'd all he said: nor could her mind, whose beam
As yet was weak, penetrate half his scheme.
But when, at length, he utter'd, 'Thou art she!'
All flash'd at once, and shrieking piteously,
'Oh, not for worlds!' she cried. 'Great God! to whom
I once knelt innocent, is this my doom?
Are all my dreams, my hopes of heavenly bliss,
My purity, my pride, then come to this,—
To live, the wanton of a fiend! to be
The pander of his guilt—oh, infamy!
And sunk, myself, as low as hell can steep
In its hot flood, drag others down as deep!
Others—ha! yes—that youth who came to-day—
Not him I loved—not him—oh! do but say,
But swear to me this moment 'tis not he,
And I will serve, dark fiend, will worship even thee!'

'Beware, young raving thing!—in time beware,
Nor utter what I cannot, must not bear,
Even from thy lips. Go—try thy lute, thy voice,
The boy must feel their magic;—I rejoice
To see those fires, no matter whence they rise,

Once more illuming my fair Priestess' eyes;
And should the youth, whom soon those eyes shall warm,
Indeed resemble thy dead lover's form,
So much the happier wilt thou find thy doom,
As one warm lover, full of life and bloom,
Excels ten thousand cold ones in the tomb.
Nay, nay, no frowning, sweet!—those eyes were made
For love, not anger—I must be obey'd.'

'Obey'd!—'t is well—yes, I deserve it all;
On me, on me Heaven's vengeance cannot fall
Too heavily; but Azim, brave and true
And beautiful—must he be ruin'd too?
Must he too, glorious as he is, be driven
A renegade like me from Love and Heaven?
Like me?—weak wretch, I wrong him; not like me;
No—he's all truth and strength and purity!
Fill up your maddening hell-cup to the brim,
Its witchery, fiends, will have no charm for him.
Let loose your glowing wantons from their bowers,
He loves, he loves, and can defy their powers!
Wretch as I am, in his heart still I reign
Pure as when first we met, without a stain!
Though ruin'd—lost—my memory, like a charm
Left by the dead, still keeps his soul from harm.
Oh, never let him know how deep the brow
He kiss'd at parting is dishonour'd now;—
Ne'er tell him how debased, how sunk is she,

Whom once he loved — once! — still loves dotingly.
Thou laugh'st, tormentor; what! thou'lt brand my name?
Do, do — in vain — he'll not believe my shame —
He thinks me true; that nought beneath God's sky
Could tempt or change me, and — so once thought I.
But this is past — though worse than death my lot,
Than hell — 't is nothing while he knows it not.
Far off to some benighted land I'll fly,
Where sunbeam ne'er shall enter till I die;
Where none will ask the lost one whence she came,
But I may fade and fall without a name.
And thou — curst man or fiend, whate'er thou art,
Who found'st this burning plague-spot in my heart,
And spread'st it — oh, so quick! — through soul and frame,
With more than demon's art, till I became
A loathsome thing, all pestilence, all flame! —
If when I'm gone——'

'Hold, fearless maniac, hold,
Nor tempt my rage — by Heaven, not half so bold
The puny bird, that dares with teasing hum
Within the crocodile's stretch'd jaws to come!
And so thou 'lt fly, forsooth? What! — give up all
Thy chaste dominion in the Haram Hall,
Where now to Love and now to Alla given,
Half mistress and half saint, thou hang'st as even
As doth Medina's tomb, 'twixt hell and heaven!
Thou 'lt fly! — as easily may reptiles run,

The gaunt snake once hath fix'd his eyes upon;
As easily, when caught, the prey may be
Pluck'd from his loving folds, as thou from me.
No, no, 'tis fix'd — let good or ill betide,
Thou 'rt mine till death, till death Mokanna's bride!
Hast thou forgot thy oath?' —

At this dread word,
The maid, whose spirit his rude taunts had stirr'd
Through all its depth, and roused an anger there
That burst and lighten'd even through her despair,
Shrunk back, as if a blight were in the breath
That spoke that word, and stagger'd, pale as death.

'Yes, my sworn bride, let others seek in bowers
Their bridal place — the charnel vault was ours!
Instead of scents and balms, for thee and me
Rose the rich steams of sweet mortality;
Gay, flickering death-lights shone while we were wed,
And, for our guests, a row of goodly Dead
(Immortal spirits in their time, no doubt,)
From reeking shrouds upon the rite look'd out!
That oath thou heard'st more lips than thine repeat;
That cup — thou shudderest, Lady, — was it sweet?
That cup we pledged, the charnel's choicest wine,
Hath bound thee — ay, body and soul are mine;
Bound thee by chains that, whether blest or curst
No matter now, not hell itself shall burst!
Hence, woman, to the Haram, and look gay,
Look wild, look — anything but sad; yet stay —

One moment more — from what this night hath pass'd,
I see thou know'st me, know'st me well at last.
Ha! ha! and so, fond thing, thou thought'st all true,
And that I love mankind! — I do, I do —
As victims, love them; as the sea-dog doats
Upon the small, sweet fry that round him floats;
Or as the Nile-bird loves the slime that gives
That rank and venomous food on which she lives!—

'And, now thou see'st my soul's angelic hue,
'Tis time these features were uncurtain'd, too;
This brow, whose light — oh, rare celestial light!—
Hath been reserved to bless thy favour'd sight;
These dazzling eyes, before whose shrouded might
Thou 'st seen immortal Man kneel down and quake—
Would that they were heaven's lightnings for his sake!
But turn and look — then wonder, if thou wilt,
That I should hate, should take revenge, by guilt,
Upon the hand whose mischief or whose mirth
Sent me thus maim'd and monstrous upon earth;
And on that race who, though more vile they be
Than mowing apes, are demi-gods to me!
Here — judge if hell, with all its power to damn,
Can add one curse to the foul thing I am!'

He raised his veil—the maid turn'd slowly round,
Look'd at him — shriek'd — and sunk upon the ground!

On their arrival, next night, at the place of encampment, they were surprised and delighted to find the groves all around illuminated; some artists of Yamtcheou having been sent on previously for the purpose. On each side of the green alley, which led to the Royal Pavilion, artificial sceneries of bamboo-work were erected, representing arches, minarets, and towers, from which hung thousands of silken lanterns, painted by the most delicate pencils of Canton. Nothing could be more beautiful than the leaves of the mango-trees and acacias, shining in the light of the bamboo-scenery, which shed a lustre round as soft as that of the nights of Peristan.

Lalla Rookh, however, who was too much occupied by the sad story of Zelica and her lover, to give a thought to anything else, except, perhaps, to him who related it, hurried on through this scene of splendour to her pavilion,— greatly to the mortification of the poor artists of Yamtcheou,— and was followed with equal rapidity by the Great Chamberlain, cursing, as he went, that ancient Mandarin whose parental anxiety in lighting up the shores of the lake, where his beloved daughter had wandered and been lost, was the origin of these fantastic Chinese illuminations.

Without a moment's delay, young Feramorz was introduced; and Fadladeen, who could never make up his mind as to the merits of a poet till he knew the religious sect to which he belonged, was about to ask him whether he was a Shia or a Sooni, when Lalla Rookh impatiently clapped her hands for silence, and the youth, being seated upon the musnud near her, proceeded:—

PREPARE thy soul, young Azim! — thou hast braved
The bands of Greece, still mighty though enslaved;
Hast faced her phalanx, arm'd with all its fame,
Her Macedonian pikes and globes of flame;
All this hast fronted, with firm heart and brow,
But a more perilous trial waits thee now,—
Woman's bright eyes, a dazzling host of eyes
From every land where woman smiles or sighs;
Of every hue, as Love may chance to raise
His black or azure banner in their blaze;
And each sweet mode of warfare, from the flash
That lightens boldly through the shadowy lash,
To the sly, stealing splendours, almost hid,
Like swords half-sheathed, beneath the downcast lid:
Such, Azim, is the lovely luminous host
Now led against thee; and, let conquerors boast
Their fields of fame, he who in virtue arms
A young, warm spirit against beauty's charms,
Who feels her brightness, yet defies her thrall,
Is the best, bravest conqueror of them all.

Now, thro' the Haram chambers, moving lights
And busy shapes proclaim the toilet's rites; —
From room to room the ready handmaids hie,
Some skill'd to wreathe the turban tastefully,
Or hang the veil, in negligence of shade,
O'er the warm blushes of the youthful maid,
Who, if between the folds but one eye shone,

Like Seba's Queen could vanquish with that one;
While some bring leaves of Henna, to imbue
The fingers' ends with a bright roseate hue,
So bright, that in the mirror's depth they seem
Like tips of coral branches in the stream;
And others mix the Kohol's jetty dye,
To give that long, dark languish to the eye,
Which makes the maids, whom kings are proud to cull
From fair Circassia's vales, so beautiful.
All is in motion; rings and plumes and pearls
Are shining everywhere:—some younger girls
Are gone by moonlight to the garden beds,
To gather fresh, cool chaplets for their heads;—
Gay creatures! sweet, tho' mournful, 't is to see
How each prefers a garland from that tree
Which brings to mind her childhood's innocent day,
And the dear fields and friendships far away.
The maid of India, blest again to hold
In her full lap the Champac's leaves of gold,
Thinks of the time when, by the Ganges' flood,
Her little playmates scatter'd many a bud
Upon her long black hair, with glossy gleam
Just dripping from the consecrated stream;
While the young Arab, haunted by the smell
Of her own mountain flowers, as by a spell,—
The sweet Elcaya, and that courteous tree
Which bows to all who seek its canopy,—
Sees, call'd up round her by these magic scents,
The well, the camels, and her father's tents;

Sighs for the home she left with little pain,
And wishes even its sorrows back again!

Meanwhile, through vast illuminated halls,
Silent and bright, where nothing but the falls
Of fragrant waters, gushing with cool sound
From many a jasper fount, is heard around,
Young Azim roams bewilder'd,— nor can guess
What means this maze of light and loneliness.
Here the way leads, o'er tessellated floors
Or mats of Cairo, through long corridors,
Where, ranged in cassolets and silver urns,
Sweet wood of aloe or of sandal burns;
And spicy rods, such as illume at night
The bowers of Tibet, send forth odorous light,
Like Peris' wands, when pointing out the road
For some pure Spirit to its blest abode:—
And here, at once, the glittering saloon
Bursts on his sight, boundless and bright as noon;
Where, in the midst, reflecting back the rays
In broken rainbows, a fresh fountain plays
High as the enamell'd cupola, which towers
All rich with Arabesques of gold and flowers:
And the mosaic floor beneath shines through
The sprinkling of that fountain's silvery dew,
Like the wet, glistening shells, of every dye,
That on the margin of the Red Sea lie.

Here too he traces the kind visitings
Of woman's love, in those fair living things

Of land and wave, whose fate — in bondage thrown
For their weak loveliness — is like her own!
On one side, gleaming with a sudden grace
Through water brilliant as the crystal vase
In which it undulates, small fishes shine,
Like golden ingots from a fairy mine; —
While, on the other, latticed lightly in
With odoriferous woods of Comorin,
Each brilliant bird that wings the air is seen:
Gay, sparkling loories, such as gleam between
The crimson blossoms of the coral tree
In the warm Isles of India's sunny sea:
Mecca's blue sacred pigeon, and the thrush
Of Hindostan, whose holy warblings gush,
At evening, from the tall pagoda's top; —
Those golden birds that, in the spice-time, drop
About the gardens, drunk with that sweet food
Whose scent hath lured them o'er the summer flood;
And those that under Araby's soft sun
Build their high nests of budding cinnamon; —
In short, all rare and beauteous things, that fly
Through the pure element, here calmly lie
Sleeping in light, like the green birds that dwell
In Eden's radiant fields of asphodel.

So on, through scenes past all imagining, —
More like the luxuries of that impious King
Whom Death's dark angel, with his lightning torch,
Struck down and blasted even in Pleasure's porch,
Than the pure dwelling of a Prophet sent,

Arm'd with Heaven's sword, for man's enfranchisement,—
Young Azim wander'd, looking sternly round;
His simple garb and war-boots' clanking sound
But ill according with the pomp and grace
And silent lull of that voluptuous place.

'Is this, then,' thought the youth, 'is this the way
To free man's spirit from the deadening sway
Of worldly sloth,—to teach him, while he lives,
To know no bliss but that which virtue gives,
And, when he dies, to leave his lofty name
A light, a landmark on the cliffs of fame?
It was not so, Land of the generous thought
And daring deed, thy godlike sages taught;
It was not thus, in bowers of wanton ease,
Thy freedom nursed her sacred energies;
Oh, not beneath the enfeebling, withering glow
Of such dull luxury did those myrtles grow,
With which she wreathed her sword, when she would dare
Immortal deeds; but in the bracing air
Of toil, of temperance,—of that high, rare,
Ethereal virtue, which alone can breathe
Life, health, and lustre into Freedom's wreath.
Who that surveys this span of earth we press,—
This speck of life in Time's great wilderness,
This narrow isthmus 'twixt two boundless seas,
The past, the future, two eternities!—
Would sully the bright spot, or leave it bare,

When he might build him a proud temple there,
A name that long shall hallow all its space,
And be each purer soul's high resting-place?
But no — it cannot be, that one whom God
Hath sent to break the wizard Falsehood's rod,
A Prophet of the Truth, whose mission draws
Its rights from Heaven, should thus profane its cause
With the world's vulgar pomp; — no, no, — I see —
He thinks me weak — this glare of luxury
Is but to tempt, to try the eaglet gaze
Of my young soul: shine on, 't will stand the blaze!'

So thought the youth; — but, even while he defied
This witching scene, he felt its witchery glide
Thro' every sense. The perfume breathing round,
Like a pervading spirit; — the still sound
Of falling waters, lulling as the song
Of Indian bees at sunset, when they throng
Around the fragrant Nilica, and deep
In its blue blossoms hum themselves to sleep;
And music, too — dear music! that can touch
Beyond all else the soul that loves it much —
Now heard far off, so far as but to seem
Like the faint, exquisite music of a dream, —
All was too much for him, too full of bliss,
The heart could nothing feel, that felt not this:
Soften'd he sunk upon a couch, and gave
His soul up to sweet thoughts, like wave on wave
Succeeding in smooth seas, when storms are laid:
He thought of Zelica, his own dear maid,

And of the time when, full of blissful sighs,
They sat and look'd into each other's eyes,
Silent and happy — as if God had given
Nought else worth looking at on this side heaven.

'O my loved mistress,— thou whose spirit still
Is with me, round me, wander where I will,—
It is for thee, for thee alone I seek
The paths of glory; to light up thy cheek
With warm approval — in that gentle look
To read my praise, as in an angel's book,
And think all toils rewarded, when from thee
I gain a smile worth immortality!
How shall I bear the moment when restored
To that young heart where I alone am lord,
Though of such bliss unworthy — since the best
Alone deserve to be the happiest,—
When from those lips, unbreathed upon for years,
I shall again kiss off the soul-felt tears,
And find those tears warm as when last they started,
Those sacred kisses pure as when we parted?
O my own life! — why should a single day,
A moment, keep me from those arms away?'

While thus he thinks, still nearer on the breeze
Come those delicious, dream-like harmonies,
Each note of which but adds new downy links
To the soft chain in which his spirit sinks.
He turns him toward the sound, and far away
Through a long vista sparkling with the play

Of countless lamps,—like the rich track which Day
Leaves on the waters, when he sinks from us,
So long the path, its light so tremulous,—
He sees a group of female forms advance,
Some chain'd together in the mazy dance
By fetters, forged in the green sunny bowers,
As they were captives to the King of Flowers;
And some disporting round, unlink'd and free,
Who seem'd to mock their sisters' slavery;
And round and round them still, in wheeling flight,
Went, like gay moths about a lamp at night;
While others walk'd, as gracefully along
Their feet kept time, the very soul of song,
From psaltery, pipe, and lutes of heavenly thrill,
Or their own youthful voices, heavenlier still.
And now they come, now pass before his eye,
Forms such as Nature moulds, when she would vie
With Fancy's pencil, and give birth to things
Lovely beyond its fairest picturings.
Awhile they dance before him, then divide,
Breaking, like rosy clouds at even-tide
Around the rich pavilion of the sun,—
Till silently dispersing, one by one
Through many a path that from the chamber leads
To gardens, terraces, and moonlight meads,
Their distant laughter comes upon the wind,
And but one trembling nymph remains behind,—
Beckoning them back in vain, for they are gone,
And she is left in all that light alone;
No veil to curtain o'er her beauteous brow,

In its young bashfulness more beauteous now;
But a light golden chain-work round her hair,
Such as the maids of Yezd and Shiras wear,
From which, on either side, gracefully hung
A golden amulet, in the Arab tongue
Engraven o'er with some immortal line
From Holy Writ, or bard scarce less divine;
While her left hand, as shrinkingly she stood,
Held a small lute of gold and sandal-wood,
Which once or twice she touch'd with hurried strain,
Then took her trembling fingers off again.
But when at length a timid glance she stole
At Azim, the sweet gravity of soul
She saw through all his features calm'd her fear,
And like a half-tamed antelope, more near,
Though shrinking still, she came; then sat her down
Upon a musnud's edge, and, bolder grown,
In the pathetic mode of Isfahan
Touch'd a preluding strain, and thus began:

There's a bower of roses by Bendemeer's stream,
And the nightingale sings round it all the day long;
In the time of my childhood 'twas like a sweet dream
To sit in the roses and hear the bird's song.

That bower and its music I never forget;
But oft when alone, in the bloom of the year,
I think — is the nightingale singing there yet?
Are the roses still bright by the calm Bendemeer?

No, the roses soon wither'd that hung o'er the wave,
But some blossoms were gather'd while freshly they shone,
And a dew was distill'd from their flowers that gave
All the fragrance of summer, when summer was gone.

Thus memory draws from delight, ere it dies,
An essence that breathes of it many a year;
Thus bright to my soul, as 't was then to mine eyes,
Is that bower on the banks of the calm Bendemeer.

'Poor maiden!' thought the youth, 'if thou wert sent,
With thy soft lute and beauty's blandishment,
To wake unholy wishes in this heart,
Or tempt its truth, thou little know'st the art;
For though thy lip should sweetly counsel wrong,
Those vestal eyes would disavow its song.
But thou hast breathed such purity, thy lay
Returns so fondly to youth's virtuous day,
And leads thy soul — if e'er it wander'd thence —
So gently back to its first innocence,
That I would sooner stop the unchain'd dove,
When swift returning to its home of love,
And round its snowy wing new fetters twine,
Than turn from virtue one pure wish of thine!'

Scarce had this feeling pass'd, when, sparkling through
The gently open'd curtains of light blue
That veil'd the breezy casement, countless eyes,

Peeping like stars through the blue evening skies,
Look'd laughing in, as if to mock the pair
That sat so still and melancholy there: —
And now the curtains fly apart, and in
From the cool air, 'mid showers of jessamine
Which those without fling after them in play,
Two lightsome maidens spring — lightsome as they
Who live in the air on odours,— and around
The bright saloon, scarce conscious of the ground,
Chase one another, in a varying dance
Of mirth and languor, coyness and advance,
Too eloquently like love's warm pursuit: —
While she, who sung so gently to the lute
Her dream of home, steals timidly away,
Shrinking as violets do in summer's ray,—
But takes with her from Azim's heart that sigh
We sometimes give to forms that pass us by
In the world's crowd, too lovely to remain,
Creatures of light we never see again!

Around the white necks of the nymphs who danced
Hung carcanets of orient gems, that glanced
More brilliant than the sea-glass glittering o'er
The hills of crystal on the Caspian shore;
While from their long dark tresses, in a fall
Of curls descending, bells as musical
As those that, on the golden-shafted trees
Of Eden, shake in the eternal breeze,
Rung round their steps, at every bound more sweet,
As 't were the ecstatic language of their feet.

At length the chase was o'er, and they stood wreathed
Within each other's arms; while soft there breathed
Through the cool casement, mingled with the sighs
Of moonlight flowers, music that seem'd to rise
From some still lake, so liquidly it rose;
And, as it swell'd again at each faint close,
The ear could track, through all that maze of chords
And young sweet voices, these impassion'd words:

A Spirit there is, whose fragrant sigh
Is burning now through earth and air:
Where cheeks are blushing, the Spirit is nigh;
Where lips are meeting, the Spirit is there!

His breath is the soul of flowers like these,
And his floating eyes — oh, they resemble
Blue water-lilies, when the breeze
Is making the stream around them tremble.

Hail to thee, hail to thee, kindling power!
Spirit of Love, Spirit of Bliss!
Thy holiest time is the moonlight hour,
And there never was moonlight so sweet as this.

By the fair and brave
Who blushing unite,
Like the sun and wave,
When they meet at night;

By the tear that shows
When passion is nigh,
As the rain-drop flows
From the heat of the sky;

By the first love-beat
Of the youthful heart,
By the bliss to meet,
And the pain to part;

By all that thou hast
To mortals given,
Which — oh, could it last,
This earth were heaven,—

We call thee hither, entrancing Power!
Spirit of Love! Spirit of Bliss!
Thy holiest time is the moonlight hour,
And there never was moonlight so sweet as this.

Impatient of a scene whose luxuries stole,
Spite of himself, too deep into his soul,
And where, midst all that the young heart loves most—
Flowers, music, smiles — to yield was to be lost,
The youth had started up and turn'd away
From the light nymphs, and their luxurious lay,
To muse upon the pictures that hung round,—
Bright images, that spoke without a sound,
And views like vistas into fairy ground.
But here again new spells came o'er his sense:
All that the pencil's mute omnipotence
Could call up into life, of soft and fair,
Of fond and passionate, was glowing there;
Nor yet too warm, but touch'd with that fine art
Which paints of pleasure but the purer part;

Which knows even Beauty when half-veil'd is best,—
Like her own radiant planet of the west,
Whose orb when half retired looks loveliest.
There hung the history of the Genii King,
Traced through each gay voluptuous wandering
With her from Saba's bowers, in whose bright eyes
He read that to be blest is to be wise;
Here fond Zuleika woos with open arms
The Hebrew boy, who flies from her young charms,
Yet, flying, turns to gaze, and, half undone,
Wishes that Heaven and she could both be won;
And here Mohammed, born for love and guile,
Forgets the Koran in his Mary's smile,—
Then beckons some kind angel from above
With a new text to consecrate their love.

With rapid step, yet pleased and lingering eye,
Did the youth pass these pictured stories by,
And hasten'd to a casement, where the light
Of the calm moon came in, and freshly bright
The fields without were seen, sleeping as still
As if no life remain'd in breeze or rill.
Here paused he, while the music, now less near,
Breathed with a holier language on his ear,
As though the distance, and that heavenly ray
Through which the sounds came floating, took away
All that had been too earthly in the lay.

Oh, could he listen to such sounds unmoved,
And by that light, nor dream of her he loved?

Dream on, unconscious boy! while yet thou mayst;
'T is the last bliss thy soul shall ever taste.
Clasp yet awhile her image to thy heart,
Ere all the light that made it dear depart.
Think of her smiles as when thou saw'st them last,
Clear, beautiful, by nought of earth o'ercast;
Recall her tears, to thee at parting given,
Pure as they weep, if angels weep, in Heaven.
Think, in her own still bower she waits thee now,
With the same glow of heart and bloom of brow,
Yet shrined in solitude — thine all, thine only,
Like the one star above thee, bright and lonely.
Oh, that a dream so sweet, so long enjoy'd,
Should be so sadly, cruelly destroy'd!

The song is hush'd, the laughing nymphs are flown,
And he is left, musing of bliss, alone;—
Alone? — no, not alone; that heavy sigh,
That sob of grief, which broke from some one nigh—
Whose could it be? — alas! is misery found
Here, even here, on this enchanted ground?
He turns, and sees a female form, close veil'd,
Leaning, as if both heart and strength had fail'd,
Against a pillar near: — not glittering o'er
With gems and wreaths, such as the others wore,
But in that deep-blue melancholy dress
Bokhara's maidens wear in mindfulness
Of friends or kindred, dead or far away;
And such as Zelica had on that day

He left her — when, with heart too full to speak,
He took away her last warm tears upon his cheek.

A strange emotion stirs within him,— more
Than mere compassion ever waked before;
Unconsciously he opes his arms, while she
Springs forward, as with life's last energy,
But, swooning in that one convulsive bound,
Sinks, ere she reach his arms, upon the ground;
Her veil falls off: her faint hands clasp his knees:
'T is she herself! —'t is Zelica he sees!
But, ah, so pale, so changed — none but a lover
Could in that wreck of beauty's shrine discover
The once adored divinity,— even he Stood for some moments mute, and doubtingly
Put back the ringlets from her brow, and gazed
Upon those lids, where once such lustre blazed,
Ere he could think she was indeed his own,
Own darling maid whom he so long had known
In joy and sorrow, beautiful in both;
Who, even when grief was heaviest — when loth
He left her for the wars — in that worst hour
Sat in her sorrow like the sweet night-flower,
When darkness brings its weeping glories out,
And spreads its sighs like frankincense about.

'Look up, my Zelica! — one moment show
Those gentle eyes to me, that I may know
Thy life, thy loveliness is not all gone,
But there, at least, shines as it ever shone.

Come, look upon thine Azim,— one dear glance,
Like those of old, were heaven! whatever chance
Hath brought thee here, oh, 't was a blessed one!
There—my loved lips—they move; that kiss hath run
Like the first shoot of life through every vein,
And now I clasp her, mine, all mine again.
Oh, the delight! — now, in this very hour,
When had the whole rich world been in my power
I should have singled out thee, only thee,
From the whole world's collected treasury —
To have thee here — to hang thus fondly o'er
My own, best, purest Zelica once more!'

It was indeed the touch of those fond lips
Upon her eyes that chased their short eclipse;
And, gradual as the snow, at Heaven's breath,
Melts off and shows the azure flowers beneath,
Her lids unclosed, and the bright eyes were seen
Gazing on his — not, as they late had been,
Quick, restless, wild, but mournfully serene;
As if to lie, even for that tranced minute,
So near his heart, had consolation in it;
And thus to wake in his beloved caress
Took from her soul one half its wretchedness.
But when she heard him call her good and pure,
Oh, 't was too much — too dreadful to endure!
Shuddering, she broke away from his embrace,
And, hiding with both hands her guilty face,
Said, in a tone whose anguish would have riven
A heart of very marble, 'Pure! — O Heaven!'

That tone — those looks so changed—the withering blight
That sin and sorrow leave where'er they light;
The dead despondency of those sunk eyes,
Where once had he thus met her by surprise,
He would have seen himself, too happy boy,
Reflected in a thousand lights of joy;
And then the place,— that bright unholy place,
Where vice lay hid beneath each winning grace
And charm of luxury, as the viper weaves
Its wily covering of sweet balsam leaves,—
All struck upon his heart sudden and cold
As death itself; it needs not to be told —
No, no — he sees it all, plain as the brand
Of burning shame can mark; whate'er the hand
That could from Heaven and him such brightness sever,
'T is done — to Heaven and him she's lost forever!
It was a dreadful moment; not the tears,
The lingering, lasting misery of years,
Could match that minute's anguish; all the worst
Of sorrow's elements in that dark burst
Broke o'er his soul, and, with one crash of fate,
Laid the whole hopes of his life desolate.

'Oh, curse me not,' she cried, as wild he toss'd
His desperate hand toward Heaven; 'tho' I am lost,
Think not that guilt, that falsehood made me fall:
No, no — 't was grief, 't was madness did it all!
Nay, doubt me not; though all thy love hath ceased—

I know it hath — yet, yet believe, at least,
That every spark of reason's light must be
Quench'd in this brain, ere I could stray from thee!
They told me thou wert dead — why, Azim, why
Did we not, both of us, that instant die
When we were parted? Oh, couldst thou but know
With what a deep devotedness of woe
I wept thine absence — o'er and o'er again
Thinking of thee, still thee, till thought grew pain,
And memory, like a drop that night and day
Falls cold and ceaseless, wore my heart away.
Didst thou but know how pale I sat at home,
Mine eyes still turn'd the way thou wert to come,
And, all the long, long night of hope and fear,
Thy voice and step still sounding in mine ear —
O God! thou wouldst not wonder that, at last,
When every hope was all at once o'ercast,
When I heard frightful voices round me say,
Azim is dead! — this wretched brain gave way,
And I became a wreck, at random driven,
Without one glimpse of reason or of Heaven —
All wild — and even this quenchless love within
Turn'd to foul fires to light me into sin!
Thou pitiest me — I knew thou wouldst — that sky
Hath nought beneath it half so lorn as I.
The fiend who lured me hither — hist! come near,
Or thou too, thou art lost, if he should hear —
Told me such things — oh, with such devilish art
As would have ruin'd even a holier heart —
Of thee, and of that ever-radiant sphere,

Where blest at length, if I but served him here,
I should forever live in thy dear sight,
And drink from those pure eyes eternal light.
Think, think how lost, how madden'd I must be,
To hope that guilt could lead to God or thee!
Thou weep'st for me — do weep! oh, that I durst
Kiss off that tear! but, no — these lips are curst,
They must not touch thee; — one divine caress,
One blessed moment of forgetfulness
I've had within those arms, and that shall lie,
Shrined in my soul's deep memory till I die;
The last of joy's last relics here below,
The one sweet drop, in all this waste of woe,
My heart has treasured from affection's spring,
To soothe and cool its deadly withering!
But thou — yes, thou must go — forever go;
This place is not for thee — for thee! oh, no!
Did I but tell thee half, thy tortured brain
Would burn like mine, and mine grow wild again!
Enough, that Guilt reigns here — that hearts, once good,
Now tainted, chill'd, and broken, are his food;
Enough, that we are parted — that there rolls
A flood of headlong fate between our souls,
Whose darkness severs me as wide from thee
As Hell from Heaven, to all eternity!'

'Zelica, Zelica!' the youth exclaim'd,
In all the tortures of a mind inflamed
Almost to madness — 'by that sacred Heaven,

Where yet, if prayers can move, thou'lt be forgiven,
As thou art here — here, in this writhing heart,
All sinful, wild, and ruin'd as thou art!
By the remembrance of our once pure love,
Which, like a churchyard light, still burns above
The grave of our lost souls — which guilt in thee
Cannot extinguish, nor despair in me,—
I do conjure, implore thee to fly hence!
If thou hast yet one spark of innocence,
Fly with me from this place'——

'With thee? oh, bliss!
'T is worth whole years of torment to hear this!
What! take the lost one with thee?—let her rove
By thy dear side, as in those days of love
When we were both so happy, both so pure?—
Too heavenly dream! if there's on earth a cure
For the sunk heart, 't is this — day after day
To be the blest companion of thy way;
To hear thine angel eloquence — to see
Those virtuous eyes forever turn'd on me;
And, in their light re-chasten'd silently,
Like the stain'd web that whitens in the sun,
Grow pure by being purely shone upon!
And thou wilt pray for me — I know thou wilt —
At the dim vesper hour, when thoughts of guilt
Come heaviest o'er the heart, thou'lt lift thine eyes,
Full of sweet tears, unto the darkening skies,
And plead for me with Heaven, till I can dare
To fix my own weak sinful glances there;

Till the good angels, when they see me cling
Forever near thee, pale and sorrowing,
Shall for thy sake pronounce my soul forgiven,
And bid thee take thy weeping slave to Heaven!
Oh, yes, I 'll fly with thee'——

Scarce had she said
These breathless words, when a voice deep and dread
As that of Monker, waking up the dead
From their first sleep — so startling 't was to both —
Rung through the casement near: 'Thine oath! thine oath!'
O Heaven, the ghastliness of that maid's look!
''T is he!' faintly she cried, while terror shook
Her inmost core, nor durst she lift her eyes,
Tho' thro' the casement now nought but the skies
And moonlit fields were seen, calm as before,—
''T is he, and I am his — all, all is o'er!
Go — fly this instant, or thou'rt ruin'd too —
Mine oath, mine oath! O God! 't is all too true!
True as the worm in this cold heart it is —
I am Mokanna's bride — his, Azim, his!
The Dead stood round us, while I spoke that vow;
Their blue lips echoed it — I hear them now!
Their eyes glared on me while I pledged that bowl:
'T was burning blood — I feel it in my soul!
And the Veil'd Bridegroom — hist! I've seen to-night
What angels know not of — so foul a sight,
So horrible — oh, never may'st thou see

What there lies hid from all but hell and me!
But I must hence — off, off! I am not thine,
Nor Heaven's, nor Love's, nor aught that is divine!
Hold me not — ha! think'st thou the fiends that sever
Hearts, cannot sunder hands? — thus, then — forever!'

With all that strength which madness lends the weak,
She flung away his arm; and with a shriek
Whose sound, though he should linger out more years
Than wretch e'er told, can never leave his ears —
Flew up through that long avenue of light,
Fleetly as some dark ominous bird of night
Across the sun, and soon was out of sight!

Lalla Rookh could think of nothing all day but the misery of these two young lovers. Her gayety was gone, and she looked pensively even upon Fadladeen. She felt, too, without knowing why, a sort of uneasy pleasure in imagining that Azim must have been just such a youth as Feramorz; just as worthy to enjoy all the blessings, without any of the pangs, of that illusive passion which too often, like the sunny apples of Istkahar, is all sweetness on one side, and all bitterness on the other.

As they passed along a sequestered river after sunset, they saw a young Hindoo girl upon the bank, whose employment seemed to them so strange that they stopped their palankeens to observe her. She had lighted a small lamp, filled with oil of cocoa, and, placing it in an earthen dish, adorned with a wreath of flowers, had committed it with a trembling hand to the stream; and was now anxiously watching its progress down the current, heedless of the gay cavalcade which had drawn up beside her. Lalla Rookh was all curiosity; — when one of her attendants, who had lived upon the banks of the Ganges (where this ceremony is so frequent, that often, in the dusk of the evening, the river is seen glittering all over with lights, like the Oton-tala, or Sea of Stars), informed the Princess that it was the usual way in which the friends of those who had gone on dangerous voyages offered up vows for their safe return. If the lamp sunk immediately, the omen was disastrous; but if it went shining down the stream, and continued to burn until entirely out of sight, the return of the beloved object was considered as certain.

Lalla Rookh, as they moved on, more than once looked back to observe how the young Hindoo's lamp proceeded; and, while she saw with pleasure that it was still unextinguished, she could not help fearing that all the hopes of this life were no better than that feeble light upon the river. The remainder of the journey was passed in silence. She now, for the first time, felt that shade of melancholy which comes over the youthful maiden's heart, as sweet and transient as her own breath upon a mirror; nor was it till she heard the lute of Feramorz, touched lightly at the door of her pavilion, that she waked from the reverie in which she had been wandering. Instantly her eyes were lighted up with pleasure; and after a few unheard remarks from Fadladeen, upon the indecorum of a poet seating himself in presence of a Princess, everything was arranged as on the preceding evening, and all listened with eagerness, while the story was thus continued:—

Whose are the gilded tents that crowd the way,
Where all was waste and silent yesterday?
This City of War, which, in a few short hours,
Hath sprung up here, as if the magic powers
Of Him who, in the twinkling of a star,
Built the high pillar'd halls of Chilminar,
Had conjured up, far as the eye can see,
This world of tents, and domes, and sun-bright armory:
Princely pavilions, screen'd by many a fold
Of crimson cloth, and topp'd with balls of gold;
Steeds, with their housings of rich silver spun,
Their chains and poitrels, glittering in the sun;
And camels, tufted o'er with Yemen's shells,
Shaking in every breeze their light-toned bells!

But yester-eve, so motionless around,
So mute was this wide plain, that not a sound
But the far torrent, or the locust bird
Hunting among the thickets, could be heard;—
Yet hark! what discords now, of every kind!
Shouts, laughs, and screams, are revelling in the wind;
The neigh of cavalry; the tinkling throngs
Of laden camels and their drivers' songs;
Ringing of arms, and flapping in the breeze
Of streamers from ten thousand canopies;
War music, bursting out from time to time,

With gong and tymbalon's tremendous chime;
Or, in the pause, when harsher sounds are mute,
The mellow breathings of some horn or flute,
That far off, broken by the eagle note
Of the Abyssinian trumpet, swell and float.

Who leads this mighty army? — ask ye who?
And mark ye not those banners of dark hue,
The Night and Shadow, over yonder tent?
It is the Caliph's glorious armament.
Roused in his Palace by the dread alarms,
That hourly came, of the false Prophet's arms,
And of his host of infidels, who hurl'd
Defiance fierce at Islam and the world,—
Though worn with Grecian warfare, and behind
The veils of his bright Palace calm reclined,
Yet brook'd he not such blasphemy should stain,
Thus unrevenged, the evening of his reign;
But, having sworn upon the Holy Grave
To conquer or to perish, once more gave
His shadowy banners proudly to the breeze,
And with an army nursed in victories,
Here stands to crush the rebels that o'errun
His blest and beauteous Province of the Sun.

Ne'er did the march of Mahadi display
Such pomp before; — not even when on his way
To Mecca's Temple, when both land and sea
Were spoil'd to feed the Pilgrim's luxury;
When round him, 'mid the burning sands, he saw

Fruits of the North in icy freshness thaw,
And cool'd his thirsty lip, beneath the glow
Of Mecca's sun, with urns of Persian snow;
Nor e'er did armament more grand than that
Pour from the kingdoms of the Caliphat.
First, in the van, the People of the Rock,
On their light mountain steeds, of royal stock;
Then, chieftains of Damascus, proud to see
The flashing of their swords' rich marquetry;
Men from the regions near the Volga's mouth
Mix'd with the rude black archers of the South;
And Indian lancers, in white-turban'd ranks,
From the far Sinde, or Attock's sacred banks,
With dusky legions from the land of Myrrh,
And many a mace-arm'd Moor and Mid-sea islander.

Nor less in number, though more new and rude
In warfare's school, was the vast multitude
That, fired by zeal, or by oppression wrong'd,
Round the white standard of the Impostor throng'd;
Beside his thousands of Believers — blind,
Burning and headlong as the Samiel wind —
Many who felt and more who fear'd to feel
The bloody Islamite's converting steel,
Flock'd to his banner: Chiefs of the Uzbek race,
Waving their heron crests with martial grace;
Turkomans, countless as their flocks, led forth
From the aromatic pastures of the North;
Wild warriors of the turquoise hills, — and those
Who dwell beyond the everlasting snows

Of Hindoo Kosh, in stormy freedom bred,
Their fort the rock, their camp the torrent's bed.
But none, of all who own'd the Chief's command,
Rush'd to that battle-field with bolder hand,
Or sterner hate, than Iran's outlaw'd men,
Her Worshippers of Fire,—all panting then
For vengeance on the accursed Saracen,—
Vengeance at last for their dear country spurn'd,
Her throne usurp'd, and her bright shrines o'erturn'd.
From Yezd's eternal Mansion of the Fire,
Where aged saints in dreams of Heaven expire;
From Badku, and those fountains of blue flame
That burn into the Caspian, fierce they came,
Careless for what or whom the blow was sped,
So vengeance triumph'd, and their tyrants bled.

Such was the wild and miscellaneous host
That high in air their motley banners tost
Around the Prophet-Chief—all eyes still bent
Upon that glittering Veil, where'er it went,
That beacon through the battle's stormy flood,
That rainbow of the field, whose showers were blood.

Twice hath the sun upon their conflict set,
And risen again, and found them grappling yet;
While streams of carnage, in his noontide blaze,
Smoke up to Heaven—hot as that crimson haze
By which the prostrate Caravan is awed,
In the red Desert, when the wind's abroad.

'On, Swords of God!' the panting Caliph calls,—
'Thrones for the living—Heaven for him who falls!'
'On, brave avengers, on!' Mokanna cries,
'And Eblis blast the recreant slave that flies!'
Now comes the brunt, the crisis of the day:
They clash, they strive, the Caliph's troops give way!
Mokanna's self plucks the black Banner down,
And now the Orient World's Imperial Crown
Is just within its grasp — when, hark! that shout!
Some hand hath check'd the flying Moslem's rout;
And now they turn, they rally — at their head
A warrior (like those angel youths who led,
In glorious panoply of heaven's own mail,
The Champions of the Faith through Beder's vale,)
Bold as if gifted with ten thousand lives,
Turns on the fierce pursuers' blades, and drives
At once the multitudinous torrent back,
While hope and courage kindle in his track;
And, at each step, his bloody falchion makes
Terrible vistas through which victory breaks!
In vain Mokanna, 'midst the general flight,
Stands, like the red moon on some stormy night,
Among the fugitive clouds that, hurrying by,
Leave only her unshaken in the sky;
In vain he yells his desperate curses out,
Deals death promiscuously to all about —
To foes that charge and coward friends that fly, —
And seems of all the Great Arch-enemy.
The panic spreads. 'A miracle!' throughout
The Moslem ranks, 'a miracle!' they shout,

All gazing on that youth, whose coming seems
A light, a glory, such as breaks in dreams;
And every sword, true as o'er billows dim
The needle tracks the lodestar, following him!

Right towards Mokanna now he cleaves his path,
Impatient cleaves, as though the bolt of wrath
He bears from Heaven withheld its awful burst
From weaker heads, and souls but half-way curst,
To break o'er Him, the mightiest and the worst!
But vain his speed — though, in that hour of blood,
Had all God's seraphs round Mokanna stood,
With swords of fire, ready like fate to fall,
Mokanna's soul would have defied them all;
Yet now the rush of fugitives, too strong
For human force, hurries even him along;
In vain he struggles 'mid the wedged array
Of flying thousands — he is borne away;
And the sole joy his baffled spirit knows,
In this forced flight, is — murdering as he goes!
As a grim tiger, whom the torrent's might
Surprises in some parch'd ravine at night,
Turns, even in drowning, on the wretched flocks,
Swept with him in that snow-flood from the rocks,
And, to the last, devouring on his way,
Bloodies the stream he hath not power to stay.

'Alla illa Alla!' — the glad shout renew —
'Alla Akbar!' — the Caliph's in Merou.
Hang out your gilded tapestry in the streets,

And light your shrines and chant your ziraleets.
The swords of God have triumph'd — on his throne
Your Caliph sits, and the Veil'd Chief hath flown.
Who does not envy that young warrior now
To whom the Lord of Islam bends his brow,
In all the graceful gratitude of power,
For his throne's safety in that perilous hour?
Who doth not wonder, when, amidst the acclaim
Of thousands, heralding to Heaven his name,
'Mid all those holier harmonies of fame
Which sound along the path of virtuous souls,
Like music round a planet as it rolls,—
He turns away — coldly, as if some gloom
Hung o'er his heart no triumphs can illume,—
Some sightless grief, upon whose blasted gaze
Though Glory's light may play, in vain it plays?
Yes, wretched Azim! thine is such a grief,
Beyond all hope, all terror, all relief;
A dark, cold calm, which nothing now can break,
Or warm or brighten — like that Syrian Lake,
Upon whose surface morn and summer shed
Their smiles in vain, for all beneath is dead! —
Hearts there have been, o'er which this weight of woe
Came by long use of suffering, tame and slow;
But thine, lost youth! was sudden — over thee
It broke at once, when all seem'd ecstasy;
When Hope look'd up, and saw the gloomy Past
Melt into splendour, and Bliss dawn at last —
'T was then, even then, o'er joys so freshly blown,

This mortal blight of misery came down;
Even then, the full, warm gushings of thy heart
Were check'd—like fount-drops, frozen as they start;
And there, like them, cold, sunless relics hang,
Each fix'd and chill'd into a lasting pang.

One sole desire, one passion now remains
To keep life's fever still within his veins,—
Vengeance!—dire vengeance on the wretch who cast
O'er him and all he loved that ruinous blast.
For this, when rumours reach'd him in his flight
Far, far away, after that fatal night,—
Rumours of armies thronging to the attack
Of the Veil'd Chief — for this he wing'd him back,
Fleet as the vulture speeds to flags unfurl'd,
And, when all hope seem'd desperate, wildly hurl'd
Himself into the scale, and saved a world.
For this he still lives on, careless of all
The wreaths that Glory on his path lets fall;
For this alone exists — like lightning-fire,
To speed one bolt of vengeance, and expire!

But safe as yet that Spirit of Evil lives;
With a small band of desperate fugitives,
The last sole stubborn fragment, left unriven,
Of the proud host that late stood fronting Heaven,
He gain'd Merou — breathed a short curse of blood
O'er his lost throne — then pass'd the Jihon's flood,
And gathering all whose madness of belief
Still saw a Saviour in their down-fallen Chief,

Raised the white banner within Neksheb's gates,
And there, untamed, the approaching conqueror waits.

Of all his Haram, all that busy hive,
With music and with sweets sparkling alive,
He took but one, the partner of his flight,
One — not for love, not for her beauty's light;
No, Zelica stood withering 'midst the gay,
Wan as the blossom that fell yesterday
From the Alma tree and dies, while overhead
To-day's young flower is springing in its stead.
Oh, not for love — the deepest Damn'd must be Touch'd with Heaven's glory, ere such fiends as he
Can feel one glimpse of Love's divinity!
But no, she is his victim; there lie all
Her charms for him — charms that can never pall,
As long as Hell within his heart can stir,
Or one faint trace of Heaven is left in her.
To work an angel's ruin, to behold
As white a page as Virtue e'er unroll'd
Blacken, beneath his touch, into a scroll
Of damning sins, seal'd with a burning soul:—
This is his triumph; this the joy accurst,
That ranks him among demons all but first:
This gives the victim that before him lies,
Blighted and lost, a glory in his eyes,
A light like that with which hell-fire illumes
The ghastly writhing wretch whom it consumes!

But other tasks now wait him — tasks that need

All the deep daringness of thought and deed
With which the Dives have gifted him,—for mark,
Over yon plains, which night had else made dark,
Those lanterns, countless as the winged lights
That spangle India's fields on showery nights;
Far as their formidable gleams they shed,
The mighty tents of the beleaguerer spread,
Glimmering along the horizon's dusky line,
And thence in nearer circles till they shine
Among the founts and groves o'er which the town
In all its arm'd magnificence looks down.
Yet, fearless, from his lofty battlements
Mokanna views that multitude of tents,—
Nay, smiles to think that, though entoil'd, beset,
Not less than myriads dare to front him yet;
That friendless, throneless, he thus stands at bay,
Even thus a match for myriads such as they.
'Oh, for a sweep of that dark Angel's wing
Who brush'd the thousands of the Assyrian King
To darkness in a moment, that I might
People Hell's chambers with yon host to-night!
But come what may, let who will grasp the throne,
Caliph or Prophet, Man alike shall groan;
Let who will torture him — Priest, Caliph, King —
Alike this loathsome world of his shall ring
With victims' shrieks and howlings of the slave,—
Sounds that shall glad me even within my grave!'
Thus to himself; but to the scanty train
Still left around him, a far different strain: —
'Glorious Defenders of the sacred Crown

I bear from Heaven, whose light nor blood shall drown,
Nor shadow of earth eclipse,—before whose gems
The paly pomp of this world's diadems,
The crown of Gerashid, the pillar'd throne
Of Parviz, and the heron crest that shone
Magnificent o'er Ali's beauteous eyes,
Fade like the stars when morn is in the skies,—
Warriors, rejoice—the port to which we've pass'd,
O'er Destiny's dark wave, beams out at last!
Victory's our own—'t is written in that Book
Upon whose leaves none but the angels look,
That Islam's sceptre shall beneath the power
Of her great foe fall broken in that hour,
When the moon's mighty orb, before all eyes,
From Neksheb's Holy Well portentously shall rise!
Now turn and see!'——

They turn'd, and, as he spoke,
A sudden splendour all around them broke,
And they beheld an orb, ample and bright,
Rise from the Holy Well and cast its light
Round the rich city and the plain for miles,
Flinging such radiance o'er the gilded tiles
Of many a dome and fair-roof'd minaret
As autumn suns shed round them when they set.
Instant, from all who saw the illusive sign
A murmur broke—'Miraculous! divine!'
The Gheber bow'd, thinking his idol star
Had waked and burst impatient through the bar

Of midnight, to inflame him to the war;
While he of Moussa's creed saw, in that ray,
The glorious Light which, in his freedom's day,
Had rested on the Ark, and now again
Shone out to bless the breaking of his chain.

'To victory!' is at once the cry of all—
Nor stands Mokanna loitering at that call;
But instant the huge gates are flung aside,
And forth, like a diminutive mountain-tide
Into the boundless sea, they speed their course
Right on into the Moslem's mighty force.
The watchmen of the camp, who, in their rounds,
Had paused, and even forgot the punctual sounds
Of the small drum with which they count the night,
To gaze upon that supernatural light,
Now sink beneath an unexpected arm,
And in a death-groan give their last alarm.
'On for the lamps that light yon lofty screen,
Nor blunt your blades with massacre so mean;
There rests the Caliph: speed: one lucky lance
May now achieve mankind's deliverance.'
Desperate the die—such as they only cast
Who venture for a world, and stake their last.
But Fate's no longer with him,—blade for blade
Springs up to meet them thro' the glimmering shade,
And, as the clash is heard, new legions soon
Pour to the spot, like bees of Kauzeroon
To the shrill timbril's summons,—till at length
The mighty camp swarms out in all its strength,

And back to Neksheb's gates, covering the plain
With random slaughter, drives the adventurous train:
Among the last of whom the Silver Veil
Is seen glittering at times, like the white sail
Of some toss'd vessel on a stormy night,
Catching the tempest's momentary light!

And hath not this brought the proud spirit low?
Nor dash'd his brow, nor check'd his daring? No.
Though half the wretches whom at night he led
To thrones and victory lie disgraced and dead,
Yet morning hears him, with unshrinking crest,
Still vaunt of thrones and victory to the rest.
And they believe him!—oh, the lover may
Distrust that look which steals his soul away;
The babe may cease to think that it can play
With Heaven's rainbow; alchymists may doubt
The shining gold their crucible gives out;
But Faith, fanatic Faith, once wedded fast
To some dear falsehood, hugs it to the last.

And well the Impostor knew all lures and arts
That Lucifer e'er taught to tangle hearts;
Nor, 'mid these last bold workings of his plot
Against men's souls, is Zelica forgot.
Ill-fated Zelica! had reason been
Awake through half the horrors thou hast seen,
Thou never couldst have borne it: Death had come
At once, and taken thy wrung spirit home.
But 't was not so,—a torpor, a suspense

Of thought, almost of life, came o'er the intense
And passionate struggles of that fearful night,
When her last hope of peace and heaven took flight:
And though, at times, a gleam of frenzy broke,—
As through some dull volcano's veil of smoke
Ominous flashings now and then will start,
Which show the fire's still busy at its heart,—
Yet was she mostly wrapp'd in solemn gloom;
Not such as Azim's, brooding o'er its doom,
And calm without as is the brow of death,
While busy worms are gnawing underneath,
But in a blank and pulseless torpor, free
From thought or pain, a seal'd-up apathy,
Which left her oft, with scarce one living thrill,
The cold pale victim of her torturer's will.

Again, as in Merou, he had her deck'd
Gorgeously out, the Priestess of the sect;
And led her glittering forth before the eyes
Of his rude train, as to a sacrifice,—
Pallid as she, the young devoted Bride
Of the fierce Nile, when, deck'd in all the pride
Of nuptial pomp, she sinks into his tide.
And while the wretched maid hung down her head,
And stood, as one just risen from the dead,
Amid that gazing crowd, the fiend would tell
His credulous slaves it was some charm or spell
Possess'd her now,—and from that darken'd trance
Should dawn ere long their Faith's deliverance;
Or if, at times, goaded by guilty shame,

Her soul was roused, and words of wildness came,
Instant the bold blasphemer would translate
Her ravings into oracles of fate,—
Would hail Heaven's signals in her flashing eyes,
And call her shrieks the language of the skies!

But vain at length his arts:—despair is seen
Gathering around, and famine comes to glean
All that the sword had left unreap'd:—in vain
At morn and eve across the northern plain
He looks impatient for the promised spears
Of the wild Hordes and Tartar mountaineers:
They come not—while his fierce beleaguerers pour
Engines of havoc in, unknown before,
And horrible as new: javelins, that fly
Enwreathed with smoky flames thro' the dark sky,
And red-hot globes, that, opening as they mount,
Discharge, as from a kindled Naptha fount,
Showers of consuming fire o'er all below,—
Looking, as through the illumined night they go,
Like those wild birds that by the Magians oft,
At festivals of fire, were sent aloft
Into the air, with blazing fagots tied
To their huge wings, scattering combustion wide.
All night the groans of wretches who expire
In agony, beneath these darts of fire,
Ring through the city; while, descending o'er
Its shrines and domes and streets of sycamore,—
Its lone bazaars, with their bright cloths of gold,
Since the last peaceful pageant left unroll'd,—

Its beauteous marble baths, whose idle jets
Now gush with blood,—and its tall minarets,
That late have stood up in the evening glare
Of the red sun, unhallow'd by a prayer;—
O'er each, in turn, the dreadful flame-bolts fall,
And death and conflagration throughout all
The desolate city hold high festival!

Mokanna sees the world is his no more:—
One sting at parting, and his grasp is o'er.
'What! drooping now?' thus, with unblushing cheek,
He hails the few who yet can hear him speak,
Of all those famish'd slaves around him lying,
And by the light of blazing temples dying;
'What! drooping now? now, when at length we press
Home o'er the very threshold of success!
When Alla from our ranks hath thinn'd away
Those grosser branches that kept out his ray
Of favour from us, and we stand at length
Heirs of his light and children of his strength,
The chosen few, who shall survive the fall
Of Kings and Thrones, triumphant over all!
Have you then lost, weak murmurers as you are,
All faith in him who was your Light, your Star?
Have you forgot the eye of glory, hid
Beneath this Veil, the flashing of whose lid
Could, like a sun-stroke of the desert, wither
Millions of such as yonder Chief brings hither?
Long have its lightnings slept, too long, but now

All earth shall feel the unveiling of this brow!
To-night,—yes, sainted men! this very night,
I bid you all to a fair festal rite,
Where, having deep refresh'd each weary limb
With viands, such as feast Heaven's cherubim,
And kindled up your souls, now sunk and dim,
With that pure wine the Dark-eyed Maids above
Keep, seal'd with precious musk, for those they love,
I will myself uncurtain in your sight
The wonders of this brow's ineffable light;
Then lead you forth, and with a wink disperse
Yon myriads, howling through the universe!'

Eager they listen, while each accent darts
New life into their chill'd and hope-sick hearts,—
Such treacherous life as the cool draught supplies
To him upon the stake, who drinks and dies!
Wildly they point their lances to the light
Of the fast-sinking sun, and shout, 'To-night!'—
'To-night!' their Chief re-echoes in a voice
Of fiend-like mockery that bids Hell rejoice.
Deluded victims!—never hath this earth
Seen mourning half so mournful as their mirth.
Here, to the few whose iron frames had stood
This racking waste of famine and of blood,
Faint, dying wretches clung, from whom the shout
Of triumph like a maniac's laugh broke out;—
There, others, lighted by the smouldering fire,
Danced like wan ghosts about a funeral pyre,
Among the dead and dying, strew'd around;—

While some pale wretch look'd on, and from his wound
Plucking the fiery dart by which he bled
In ghastly transport waved it o'er his head!

'T was more than midnight now; a fearful pause
Had follow'd the long shouts, the wild applause,
That lately from those Royal Gardens burst,
Where the Veil'd demon held his feast accurst,
When Zelica — alas, poor ruin'd heart,
In every horror doom'd to bear its part! —
Was bidden to the banquet by a slave,
Who, while his quivering lip the summons gave,
Grew black, as though the shadows of the grave
Compass'd him round, and ere he could repeat
His message through, fell lifeless at her feet!
Shuddering, she went: — a soul-felt pang of fear,
A presage that her own dark doom was near,
Roused every feeling, and brought Reason back
Once more, to writhe her last upon the rack.
All round seem'd tranquil—even the foe had ceased,
As if aware of that demoniac feast,
His fiery bolts; and though the heavens look'd red,
'T was but some distant conflagration's spread.
But hark! she stops, she listens — dreadful tone!
'T is her Tormentor's laugh! — and now a groan,
A long death-groan comes with it: — can this be
The place of mirth, the bower of revelry?
She enters — Holy Alla, what a sight
Was there before her! By the glimmering light

Of the pale dawn, mix'd with the flare of brands
That round lay burning, dropp'd from lifeless hands,
She saw the board, in splendid mockery spread,
Rich censers breathing, garlands overhead,
The urns, the cups, from which they late had quaff'd,
All gold and gems, but—what had been the draught?
Oh, who need ask, that saw those livid guests,
With their swollen heads sunk blackening on their breasts,
Or looking pale to Heaven with glassy glare,
As if they sought, but saw no mercy there;—
As if they felt, though poison rack'd them through,
Remorse the deadlier torment of the two!
While some, the bravest, hardiest of the train
Of their false Chief, who on the battle-plain
Would have met death with transport by his side,
Here mute and helpless gasp'd;—but, as they died,
Look'd horrible vengeance with their eyes' last strain,
And clench'd the slackening hand at him in vain.

Dreadful it was to see the ghastly stare,
The stony look of horror and despair,
Which some of these expiring victims cast
Upon their souls' tormentor to the last,—
Upon that mocking Fiend, whose Veil, now raised,
Show'd them, as in death's agony they gazed—
Not the long-promised light, the brow whose beaming
Was to come forth, all conquering, all redeeming,
But features horribler than Hell e'er traced
On its own brood: no Demon of the Waste,

No churchyard Ghole caught lingering in the light
Of the blest sun, e'er blasted human sight
With lineaments so foul, so fierce as those
The Impostor now in grinning mockery shows: —
'There, ye wise Saints, behold your Light, your Star!
Ye would be dupes and victims, and ye are!
Is it enough? or must I, while a thrill
Lives in your sapient bosoms, cheat you still?
Swear that the burning death ye feel within
Is but the trance with which Heaven's joys begin;
That this foul visage, foul as e'er disgraced
Even monstrous man, is — after God's own taste;
And that — but see! ere I have half-way said
My greetings through, the uncourteous souls are fled.
Farewell, sweet spirits; not in vain ye die,
If Eblis loves you half so well as I.—
Ha, my young bride! 't is well, take thou thy seat;
Nay, come, no shuddering, didst thou never meet
The dead before?—they graced our wedding, sweet;
And these, my guests to-night, have brimm'd so true
Their parting cups, that thou shalt pledge one too.
But — how is this? all empty? all drunk up?
Hot lips have been before thee in the cup,
Young bride,— yet stay, one precious drop remains,
Enough to warm a gentle Priestess' veins: —
Here, drink, and should thy lover's conquering arms
Speed hither, ere thy lip lose all its charms,
Give him but half this venom in thy kiss,
And I'll forgive my haughty rival's bliss!

'For me — I too must die, but not like these
Vile rankling things, to fester in the breeze,
To have this brow in ruffian triumph shown,
With all Death's grimness added to its own,
And rot to dust beneath the taunting eyes
Of slaves, exclaiming, "There his Godship lies!"
No, cursed race! since first my soul drew breath,
They 've been my dupes, and shall be e'en in death.
Thou seest yon cistern in the shade,—'t is fill'd
With burning drugs, for this last hour distill'd:
There will I plunge me, in that liquid flame —
Fit bath to lave a dying Prophet's frame! —
There perish, all, ere pulse of thine shall fail,
Nor leave one limb to tell mankind the tale.
So shall my votaries, wheresoe'er they rave,
Proclaim that Heaven took back the Saint it gave;
That I 've but vanish'd from this earth awhile,
To come again, with bright, unshrouded smile!
So shall they build me altars in their zeal,
Where knaves shall minister, and fools shall kneel;
Where Faith may mutter o'er her mystic spell,
Written in blood, and Bigotry may swell
The sail he spreads for Heaven with blasts from Hell!
So shall my banner, through long ages, be
The rallying sign of fraud and anarchy; —
Kings yet unborn shall rue Mokanna's name,
And though I die, my spirit, still the same,
Shall walk abroad in all the stormy strife
And guilt and blood that were its bliss in life.
But hark! their battering engine shakes the wall—

Why, let it shake! thus I can brave them all:
No trace of me shall greet them when they come:
And I can trust thy faith, for — thou 'lt be dumb.
Now mark how readily a wretch like me
In one bold plunge commences Deity!'

He sprung and sunk, as the last words were said:
Quick closed the burning waters o'er his head:
And Zelica was left, within the ring
Of those wide walls the only living thing;
The only wretched one, still cursed with breath,
In all that frightful wilderness of death!
More like some bloodless ghost, such as they tell
In the lone Cities of the Silent dwell,
And there, unseen of all but Alla, sit
Each by its own pale carcass, watching it.

But morn is up, and a fresh warfare stirs
Throughout the camp of the beleaguerers.
Their globes of fire — the dread artillery lent
By Greece to conquering Mahadi — are spent;
And now the scorpion's shaft, the quarry sent
From high ballistas, and the shielded throng
Of soldiers swinging the huge ram along,
All speak the impatient Islamite's intent
To try, at length, if tower and battlement
And bastion'd wall be not less hard to win,
Less tough to break down than the hearts within.
First in impatience and in toil is he,
The burning Azim — oh, could he but see

The Impostor once alive within his grasp,
Not the gaunt lion's hug, nor boa's clasp,
Could match that gripe of vengeance, or keep pace
With the fell heartiness of Hate's embrace!

Loud rings the ponderous ram against the walls;
Now shake the ramparts, now a buttress falls,
But still no breach —'Once more, one mighty swing
Of all your beams, together thundering!'
There—the wall shakes—the shouting troops exult,
'Quick, quick discharge your weightiest catapult
Right on that spot, and Neksheb is our own!'
'T is done — the battlements come crashing down,
And the huge wall, by that stroke riven in two,
Yawning, like some old crater rent anew,
Shows the dim desolate city smoking through.
But strange! no signs of life — nought living seen
Above, below — what can this stillness mean?
A minute's pause suspends all hearts and eyes,—
'In through the breach!' impetuous Azim cries;
But the cool Caliph, fearful of some wile
In this blank stillness, checks the troops awhile.—
Just then, a figure, with slow step advanced
Forth from the ruin'd walls, and as there glanced
A sunbeam over it, all eyes could see
The well-known Silver Veil!—'T is He, 't is He,
Mokanna, and alone!' they shout around;
Young Azim from his steed springs to the ground—
'Mine, Holy Caliph! mine,' he cries, 'the task
To crush yon daring wretch — 't is all I ask!'

Eager he darts to meet the demon foe,
Who still across wide heaps of ruin slow
And falteringly comes, till they are near;
Then, with a bound, rushes on Azim's spear,
And casting off the Veil in falling, shows —
Oh! —'t is his Zelica's life-blood that flows!

'I meant not, Azim,' soothingly she said,
As on his trembling arm she lean'd her head,
And looking in his face, saw anguish there
Beyond all wounds the quivering flesh can bear,
'I meant not thou shouldst have the pain of this:
Though death, with thee thus tasted, is a bliss
Thou wouldst not rob me of, didst thou but know
How oft I've pray'd to God I might die so!
But the Fiend's venom was too scant and slow:
To linger on were maddening, and I thought
If once that Veil — nay, look not on it! — caught
The eyes of your fierce soldiery, I should be Struck by a thousand death-darts instantly.
But this is sweeter — oh, believe me, yes —
I would not change this sad but dear caress,
This death within thine arms I would not give
For the most smiling life the happiest live!
All that stood dark and drear before the eye
Of my stray'd soul, is passing swiftly by;
A light comes o'er me from those looks of love,
Like the first dawn of mercy from above;
And if thy lips but tell me I'm forgiven,
Angels will echo the blest words in Heaven!

But live, mine Azim; — oh, to call thee mine
Thus once again! mine Azim — dream divine!
Live, if thou ever lovedst me, if to meet
Thy Zelica hereafter would be sweet,
Oh, live to pray for her — to bend the knee
Morning and night before that Deity,
To whom pure lips and hearts without a stain,
As thine are, Azim, never breathed in vain;
And pray that he may pardon her, may take
Compassion on her soul for thy dear sake,
And nought remembering but her love to thee,
Make her all thine, all His, eternally!
Go to those happy fields where first we twined
Our youthful hearts together, — every wind
That meets thee there, fresh from the well-known flowers,
Will bring the sweetness of those innocent hours
Back to thy soul, — and mayst thou feel again
For thy poor Zelica as thou didst then.
So shall thine orisons, like dew that flies
To Heaven upon the morning's sunshine, rise
With all love's earliest ardour to the skies!
And should they — but, alas, my senses fail! —
Oh, for one minute! — should thy prayers prevail —
If pardon'd souls may, from that World of Bliss,
Reveal their joy to those they love in this —
I 'll come to thee — in some sweet dream — and tell —
Oh, Heaven! — I die — dear love! farewell, farewell!'

Time fleeted,—years on years had pass'd away,
And few of those who on that mournful day
Had stood, with pity in their eyes, to see
The maiden's death and the youth's agony,
Were living still,—when, by a rustic grave,
Beside the swift Amoo's transparent wave,
An aged man, who had grown aged there
By that lone grave, morning and night in prayer,
For the last time knelt down; and, tho' the shade
Of death hung darkening over him, there play'd
A gleam of rapture on his eye and cheek,
That brighten'd even Death—like the last streak
Of intense glory on the horizon's brim,
When night o'er all the rest hangs chill and dim.
His soul had seen a Vision, while he slept:—
She for whose spirit he had pray'd and wept
So many years, had come to him, all drest
In angel smiles, and told him she was blest!
For this the old man breathed his thanks,—and died.
And there, upon the banks of that loved tide,
He and his Zelica sleep side by side.

THE story of the Veiled Prophet of Khorassan being ended, they were now doomed to hear Fadladeen's criticisms upon it. A series of disappointments and accidents had occurred to this learned Chamberlain during the journey. In the first place, those couriers stationed, as in the reign of Shah Jehan, between Delhi and the Western coast of India, to secure a constant supply of mangoes for the Royal Table, had, by some cruel irregularity, failed in their duty; and to eat any mangoes but those of Mazagong was, of course, impossible. In the next place, the elephant, laden with his fine antique porcelain, had, in an unusual fit of liveliness, shattered the whole set to pieces: — an irreparable loss, as many of the vessels were so exquisitely old, as to have been used under the Emperors Yan and Chun, who reigned many ages before the dynasty of Tang. His Koran, too, supposed to be the identical copy between the leaves of which Mahomet's favourite pigeon used to nestle, had been mislaid by his Koran-bearer three whole days; not without much spiritual alarm to Fadladeen, who, though professing to hold, with other loyal and orthodox Mussulmans, that salvation could only be found in the Koran, was strongly suspected of believing, in his heart, that it could only be found in his own particular copy of it. When to all these grievances is added the obstinacy of the cooks, in putting the pepper of Canara into his dishes instead of the cinnamon of Serendib, we may easily suppose that he came to the task of criticism with, at least, a sufficient degree of irritability for the purpose.

"In order," said he, importantly swinging about his chaplet of pearls, "to convey with clearness my opinion of the story this young man has related, it is necessary to take a review of all the stories that have ever"—"My good Fadladeen!" exclaimed the Princess, interrupting him, "we really do not deserve that you should give yourself so much trouble. Your opinion of the poem we have just heard will, I have no doubt, be abundantly edifying, without any further waste of your valuable erudition."—"If that be all," replied the critic, evidently mortified at not being allowed to show how much he knew about everything but the subject immediately before him, "if that be all that is required, the matter is easily despatched." He then proceeded to analyze the poem, in that strain (so well known to the unfortunate bards of Delhi) whose censures were an infliction from which few recovered, and whose very praises were like the honey extracted from the bitter flowers of the aloe. The chief personages of the story were, if he rightly understood them, an ill-favoured gentleman, with a veil over his face; a young lady, whose reason went and came, according as it suited the poet's convenience to be sensible or otherwise; and a youth in one of those hideous Bucharian bonnets, who took the aforesaid gentleman in a veil for a Divinity. "From such materials," said he, "what can be expected? After rivalling each other in long speeches and absurdities, through some thousands of lines as indigestible as the filberts of Berdaa, our friend in the veil jumps into a tub of aquafortis; the young lady dies in a set speech, whose only recommendation is that it is her last; and the lover lives on to a good old age for the laudable purpose of seeing her ghost, which he at last happily accomplishes, and expires. This, you will allow, is a fair summary of the story; and if Nasser, the Arabian merchant, told no better, our Holy Prophet (to whom be all honour and glory!) had no need to be jealous of his abilities for story-telling."

With respect to the style, it was worthy of the matter;—it had not even those politic contrivances of structure which make up for the commonness of the thoughts by the peculiarity of the manner, nor that stately poetical phraseology by which sentiments mean in themselves, like the blacksmith's apron converted into a banner, are so easily gilt and embroidered into consequence. Then, as to the versification, it was, to say no worse of it, execrable: it had neither the copious flow of Ferdosi, the sweetness of Hafez, nor the sententious march of Sadi, but appeared to him, in the uneasy heaviness of its movements, to have been modelled upon the gait of a very tired dromedary. The licenses, too, in which it indulged were unpardonable,— for instance, this line, and the poem abounded with such: —

"What critic that can count," said Fadladeen, "and has his full complement of fingers to count withal, would tolerate for an instant such syllabic superfluities?"— He here looked round, and discovered that most of his audience were asleep, while the glimmering lamps seemed inclined to follow their example. It became necessary, therefore, however painful to himself, to put an end to his valuable animadversions for the present, and he accordingly concluded, with an air of dignified candour, thus: "Notwithstanding the observations which I have thought it my duty to make, it is by no means my wish to discourage the young man: — so far from it, indeed, that if he will but totally alter his style of writing and thinking, I have very little doubt that I shall be vastly pleased with him."

Some days elapsed, after this harangue of the Great Chamberlain, before Lalla Rookh could venture to ask for another story. The youth was still a welcome guest in the pavilion — to one heart, perhaps, too dangerously welcome: — but all mention of poetry was, as if by common consent, avoided. Though none of the party had much respect for Fadladeen, yet his censures, thus magisterially delivered, evidently made an impression on them all. The Poet himself, to whom criticism was quite a new operation (being wholly unknown in that Paradise of the Indies, Cashmere), felt the shock as it is generally felt at first, till use has made it more tolerable to the patient; the Ladies began to suspect that they ought not to be pleased, and seemed to conclude that there must have been much good sense in what Fadladeen said, from its having sent them all so soundly to sleep; while the self-complacent Chamberlain was left to triumph in the idea of having, for the hundred and fiftieth time in his life, extinguished a Poet. Lalla Rookh alone — and Love knew why — persisted in being delighted with all she had heard, and in resolving to hear more as speedily as possible. Her manner, however, of first returning to the subject was unlucky. It was while they rested during the heat of noon near a fountain, on which some hand had rudely traced those well-known words from the Garden of Sadi,— "Many, like me, have viewed this fountain, but they are gone, and their eyes are closed forever!" — that she took occasion, from the melancholy beauty of this passage, to dwell upon the charms of poetry in general. "It is true," she said, "few poets can imitate that sublime bird, which flies always in the air, and never touches the earth: — it is only once in many ages a Genius appears, whose words, like those on the Written Mountain, last forever; but still there are some, as delightful, perhaps, though not so wonderful, who, if not stars over our head, are at least flowers along our path, and whose sweetness of the moment we ought gratefully to inhale, without calling upon them for a brightness and a durability beyond their nature. In short," continued she, blushing as if conscious of being caught in an oration, "it is quite cruel that a poet cannot wander through his regions of enchantment, without having a critic forever, like the Old Man of the Sea, upon his back!"—Fadladeen, it was plain, took this last luckless allusion to himself, and would treasure it up in his mind as a whetstone for his next criticism. A sudden silence ensued; and the Princess, glancing a look at Feramorz, saw plainly she must wait for a more courageous moment.

But the glories of Nature and her wild fragrant airs, playing freshly over the current of youthful spirits, will soon heal even deeper wounds than the dull Fadladeens of this world can inflict. In an evening or two after, they came to the small Valley of Gardens, which had been planted, by order of the Emperor, for his favourite sister, Rochinara, during their progress to Cashmere some years before; and never was there a more sparkling assemblage of sweets, since the Gulzar-e-Irem, or Rose-bower of Irem. Every precious flower was there to be found that poetry, or love, or religion, has ever consecrated,—from the dark hyacinth, to which Hafez compares his mistress's hair, to the Cámalatá, by whose rosy blossoms the heaven of Indra is scented. As they sat in the cool fragrance of this delicious spot, and Lalla Rookh remarked that she could fancy it the abode of that Flower-loving Nymph whom they worship in the temples of Kathay, or of one of those Peris, those beautiful creatures of the air, who live upon perfumes, and to whom a place like this might make some amends for the Paradise they have lost,—the young Poet, in whose eyes she appeared, while she spoke, to be one of the bright spiritual creatures she was describing, said hesitatingly that he remembered a Story of a Peri, which, if the Princess had no objection, he would venture to relate. "It is," said he, with an appealing look to Fadladeen, "in a lighter and humbler strain than the other"; then, striking a few careless but melancholy chords on his kitar, he thus began:—

PARADISE AND THE PERI.

One morn a Peri at the gate
Of Eden stood, disconsolate;
And as she listen'd to the Springs
  Of Life within, like music flowing,
And caught the light upon her wings
  Through the half-open portal glowing,
She wept to think her recreant race
Should e'er have lost that glorious place!

'How happy,' exclaim'd this child of air,
'Are the holy Spirits who wander there,
  'Mid flowers that never shall fade or fall;
Though mine are the gardens of earth and sea,
And the stars themselves have flowers for me,
  One blossom of Heaven outblooms them all!

'Though sunny the Lake of cool Cashmere,
With its plane-tree Isle reflected clear,
  And sweetly the founts of that Valley fall;
Though bright are the waters of Sing-su-hay,
And the golden floods that thitherward stray,
Yet — oh, 't is only the Blest can say
  How the waters of Heaven outshine them all!

'Go, wing thy flight from star to star,
From world to luminous world, as far
As the universe spreads its flaming wall:
Take all the pleasures of all the spheres,
And multiply each through endless years,—
One minute of Heaven is worth them all!'

The glorious Angel who was keeping
The Gates of Light beheld her weeping;
And as he nearer drew and listen'd
To her sad song, a tear-drop glisten'd
Within his eyelids, like the spray
From Eden's fountain, when it lies
On the blue flower, which, Bramins say,
Blooms nowhere but in Paradise.

'Nymph of a fair but erring line,'
Gently he said, 'one hope is thine:
'T is written in the Book of Fate,
The Peri yet may be forgiven
Who brings to this Eternal Gate
The Gift that is most dear to Heaven!
Go, seek it, and redeem thy sin —
'T is sweet to let the Pardon'd in.'

Rapidly as comets run
To the embraces of the Sun,
Fleeter than the starry brands
Flung at night from angel hands,
At those dark and daring sprites

Who would climb the empyreal heights,
Down the blue vault the Peri flies,
And, lighted earthward by a glance
That just then broke from morning's eyes,
Hung hovering o'er our world's expanse.

But whither shall the Spirit go
To find this gift for Heaven? —'I know
The wealth,' she cries, 'of every urn,
In which unnumber'd rubies burn,
Beneath the pillars of Chilminar;
I know where the Isles of Perfume are,
Many a fathom down in the sea,
To the south of sun-bright Araby;
I know, too, where the Genii hid
The jewell'd cup of their King Jamshid,
With Life's elixir sparkling high,—
But gifts like these are not for the sky.
Where was there ever a gem that shone
Like the steps of Alla's wonderful Throne?
And the Drops of Life—oh, what would they be
In the boundless Deep of Eternity?'

While thus she mused, her pinions fann'd
The air of that sweet Indian land
Whose air is balm, whose ocean spreads
O'er coral rocks and amber beds;
Whose mountains, pregnant by the beam
Of the warm sun, with diamonds teem;
Whose rivulets are like rich brides,

Lovely, with gold beneath their tides;
Whose sandal groves and bowers of spice
Might be a Peri's Paradise!
But crimson now her rivers ran
With human blood: the smell of death
Came reeking from those spicy bowers,
And man, the sacrifice of man,
Mingled his taint with every breath
Upwafted from the innocent flowers.
Land of the Sun, what foot invades
Thy Pagods and thy pillar'd shades,
Thy cavern shrines, and Idol stones,
Thy Monarchs and their thousand Thrones?
'T is he of Gazna,—fierce in wrath
He comes, and India's diadems
Lie scatter'd in his ruinous path.
His bloodhounds he adorns with gems,
Torn from the violated necks
Of many a young and loved Sultana;
Maidens, within their pure Zenana,
Priests in the very fane, he slaughters,
And chokes up with the glittering wrecks
Of golden shrines the sacred waters!
Downward the Peri turns her gaze,
And through the war-field's bloody haze
Beholds a youthful warrior stand,
Alone, beside his native river,—
The red blade broken in his hand,
And the last arrow in his quiver.
'Live,' said the Conqueror, 'live to share

The trophies and the crowns I bear!'
Silent that youthful warrior stood,
Silent he pointed to the flood
All crimson with his country's blood,—
Then sent his last remaining dart,
For answer, to the Invader's heart.

False flew the shaft, though pointed well:
The Tyrant lived, the Hero fell!—
Yet mark'd the Peri where he lay,
And when the rush of war was past,
Swiftly descending on a ray
Of morning light, she caught the last,
Last glorious drop his heart had shed,
Before its free-born spirit fled!

'Be this,' she cried, as she wing'd her flight,
'My welcome gift at the Gates of Light.
Though foul are the drops that oft distil
On the field of warfare, blood like this,
For Liberty shed, so holy is,
It would not stain the purest rill
That sparkles among the Bowers of Bliss!
Oh, if there be, on this earthly sphere,
A boon, an offering Heaven holds dear,
'T is the last libation Liberty draws
From the heart that bleeds and breaks in her cause!'

'Sweet,' said the Angel, as she gave
The gift into his radiant hand,

'Sweet is our welcome of the Brave
Who die thus for their native Land.
But see, alas! the crystal bar
Of Eden moves not,—holier far
Than even this drop the boon must be,
That opes the Gates of Heaven for thee.'

Her first fond hope of Eden blighted,
Now among Afric's lunar Mountains,
Far to the South the Peri lighted;
And sleek'd her plumage at the fountains
Of that Egyptian tide, whose birth
Is hidden from the sons of earth
Deep in those solitary woods,
Where oft the Genii of the Floods
Dance round the cradle of their Nile,
And hail the new-born Giant's smile.
Thence over Egypt's palmy groves,
Her grots, and sepulchres of Kings,
The exiled Spirit sighing roves;
And now hangs listening to the doves
In warm Rosetta's vale—now loves
To watch the moonlight on the wings
Of the white pelicans that break
The azure calm of Mœris' Lake.
'T was a fair scene—a land more bright
Never did mortal eye behold!
Who could have thought, that saw, this night,
Those valleys and their fruits of gold
Basking in Heaven's serenest light;

Those groups of lovely date-trees bending
  Languidly their leaf-crown'd heads,
Like youthful maids, when sleep descending
  Warns them to their silken beds;
Those virgin lilies, all the night
  Bathing their beauties in the lake,
That they may rise more fresh and bright,
  When their beloved Sun's awake;
Those ruin'd shrines and towers that seem
The relics of a splendid dream,
  Amid whose fairy loneliness
Nought but the lapwing's cry is heard,
Nought seen but — when the shadows, flitting
Fast from the moon, unsheathe its gleam —
Some purple-wing'd Sultana sitting
  Upon a column, motionless
And glittering like an Idol bird! —
Who could have thought, that there, even there,
Amid those scenes so still and fair,
The Demon of the Plague hath cast
From his hot wing a deadlier blast,
More mortal far than ever came
From the red Desert's sands of flame!
So quick, that every living thing
Of human shape, touch'd by his wing,
Like plants where the Simoon hath past,
At once falls black and withering!

The sun went down on many a brow
  Which, full of bloom and freshness then,

Is rankling in the pest-house now,
And ne'er will feel that sun again.
And, oh! to see the unburied heaps
On which the lonely moonlight sleeps —
The very vultures turn away,
And sicken at so foul a prey!
Only the fierce hyæna stalks
Throughout the city's desolate walks
At midnight, and his carnage plies: —
Woe to the half-dead wretch who meets
The glaring of those large blue eyes
Amid the darkness of the streets!

'Poor race of men!' said the pitying Spirit,
'Dearly ye pay for your primal Fall —
Some flowerets of Eden ye still inherit,
But the trail of the Serpent is over them all!'
She wept — the air grew pure and clear
Around her, as the bright drops ran:
For there's a magic in each tear
Such kindly Spirits weep for man!
Just then beneath some orange trees,
Whose fruit and blossoms in the breeze
Were wantoning together, free,
Like age at play with infancy,—
Beneath that fresh and springing bower,
Close by the Lake, she heard the moan
Of one who, at this silent hour,
Had thither stolen to die alone:

One who in life, where'er he moved,
Drew after him the hearts of many,
Yet now, as though he ne'er were loved,
Dies here unseen, unwept by any!
None to watch near him — none to slake
The fire that in his bosom lies,
With even a sprinkle from that lake
Which shines so cool before his eyes!
No voice, well-known through many a day,
To speak the last, the parting word,
Which, when all other sounds decay,
Is still like distant music heard;
That tender farewell on the shore
Of this rude world, when all is o'er,
Which cheers the spirit, ere its bark
Puts off into the unknown Dark.

Deserted youth! one thought alone
Shed joy around his soul in death:
That she, whom he for years had known,
And loved, and might have call'd his own,
Was safe from this foul midnight's breath,—
Safe in her father's princely halls,
Where the cool airs from fountain falls,
Freshly perfumed by many a brand
Of the sweet wood from India's land,
Were pure as she whose brow they fann'd.

But see! who yonder comes by stealth,
This melancholy bower to seek,

Like a young envoy, sent by Health,
With rosy gifts upon her cheek?
'T is she! — far off, through moonlight dim,
He knew his own betrothed bride,
She, who would rather die with him,
Than live to gain the world beside! —
Her arms are round her lover now,
His livid cheek to hers she presses,
And dips, to bind his burning brow,
In the cool lake her loosen'd tresses.
Ah! once, how little did he think
An hour would come, when he should shrink
With horror from that dear embrace,
Those gentle arms, that were to him
Holy as is the cradling place
Of Eden's infant cherubim!
And now he yields — now turns away,
Shuddering as if the venom lay
All in those proffer'd lips alone,—
Those lips that, then so fearless grown,
Never until that instant came
Near his unask'd or without shame.
'Oh, let me only breathe the air,
That blessed air, that's breathed by thee,
And whether on its wings it bear
Healing or death, 't is sweet to me!
There — drink my tears, while yet they fall —
Would that my bosom's blood were balm,
And well thou know'st, I'd shed it all,
To give thy brow one minute's calm.

Nay, turn not from me that dear face —
Am I not thine? — thine own loved bride? —
The one, the chosen one, whose place
In life or death is by thy side?
Think'st thou that she, whose only light
In this dim world from thee hath shone,
Could bear the long, the cheerless night,
That must be hers when thou art gone?
That I can live, and let thee go,
Who art my life itself? — No, no! —
When the stem dies, the leaf that grew
Out of its heart must perish too!
Then turn to me, mine own love, turn,
Before, like thee, I fade and burn;
Cling to these yet cool lips, and share
The last pure life that lingers there!'
She fails — she sinks — as dies the lamp
In charnel airs or cavern-damp,
So quickly do his baleful sighs
Quench all the sweet light of her eyes.
One struggle, and his pain is past!
Her lover is no longer living!
One kiss the maiden gives, one last
Long kiss, which she expires in giving!

'Sleep,' said the Peri, as softly she stole
The farewell sigh of that vanishing soul —
As true as e'er warm'd a woman's breast;
'Sleep on, in visions of odour rest,
In balmier airs than ever yet stirr'd

The enchanted pile of that lonely bird,
Who sings at the last his own death-lay,
And in music and perfume dies away!'

Thus saying, from her lips she spread
Unearthly breathings through the place,
And shook her sparkling wreath, and shed
Such lustre o'er each paly face,
That like two lovely saints they seem'd,
Upon the eve of doomsday taken
From their dim graves, in odour sleeping,—
While that benevolent Peri beam'd
Like their good angel, calmly keeping
Watch o'er them till their souls would waken.

But morn is blushing in the sky:
Again the Peri soars above,
Bearing to Heaven that precious sigh
Of pure self-sacrificing love.
High throbb'd her heart, with hope elate;
The Elysian palm she soon shall win,
For the bright Spirit at the gate
Smiled as she gave that offering in;
And she already hears the trees
Of Eden, with their crystal bells
Ringing in that ambrosial breeze
That from the throne of Alla swells;
And she can see the starry bowls
That lie around that lucid lake,
Upon whose banks admitted Souls
Their first sweet draught of glory take!

But ah! even Peris' hopes are vain:—
Again the Fates forbade, again
The immortal barrier closed:—'Not yet,'
The Angel said, as with regret
He shut from her that glimpse of glory;
'True was the maiden, and her story,
Written in light o'er Alla's head,
By seraph eyes shall long be read.
But, Peri, see—the crystal bar
Of Eden moves not—holier far
Than even this sigh the boon must be
That opes the Gates of Heaven for thee.'

Now, upon Syria's land of roses
Softly the light of Eve reposes,
And, like a glory, the broad sun
Hangs over sainted Lebanon;
Whose head in wintry grandeur towers,
And whitens with eternal sleet,
While Summer, in a vale of flowers,
Is sleeping rosy at his feet.

To one who look'd from upper air
O'er all the enchanted regions there,
How beauteous must have been the glow,
The life, the sparkling, from below!
Fair gardens, shining streams, with ranks
Of golden melons on their banks,
More golden where the sunlight falls;
Gay lizards, glittering on the walls

Of ruin'd shrines, busy and bright
As they were all alive with light;
And yet more splendid, numerous flocks
Of pigeons, settling on the rocks,
With their rich restless wings that gleam
Variously in the crimson beam
Of the warm West,—as if inlaid
With brilliants from the mine, or made
Of tearless rainbows such as span
The unclouded skies of Peristan.
And then the mingling sounds that come
Of shepherd's ancient reed, with hum
Of the wild bees of Palestine,
Banquetting through the flowery vales;
And, Jordan, those sweet banks of thine,
And woods, so full of nightingales.

But nought can charm the luckless Peri:
Her soul is sad, her wings are weary:
Joyless she sees the Sun look down
On that great Temple, once his own,
Whose lonely columns stand sublime,
Flinging their shadows from on high,
Like dials which the wizard Time
Had raised to count his ages by!

Yet haply there may lie conceal'd
Beneath those Chambers of the Sun,
Some amulet of gems anneal'd
In upper fires, some tablet seal'd

With the great name of Solomon,
Which, spell'd by her illumined eyes,
May teach her where, beneath the moon,
In earth or ocean, lies the boon,
The charm that can restore so soon
An erring Spirit to the skies.

Cheer'd by this hope, she bends her thither:—
Still laughs the radiant eye of Heaven,
Nor have the golden bowers of Even
In the rich West begun to wither;
When, o'er the vale of Balbec winging
Slowly, she sees a child at play,
Among the rosy wild-flowers singing,
As rosy and as wild as they;
Chasing, with eager hands and eyes,
The beautiful blue damsel-flies
That flutter'd round the jasmine stems,
Like winged flowers or flying gems:—
And, near the boy, who, tired with play,
Now nestling 'mid the roses lay,
She saw a wearied man dismount
From his hot steed, and on the brink
Of a small imaret's rustic fount
Impatient fling him down to drink.
Then swift his haggard brow he turn'd
To the fair child, who fearless sat,
Though never yet hath day-beam burn'd
Upon a brow more fierce than that,—
Sullenly fierce, a mixture dire,

Like thunder-clouds, of gloom and fire,
In which the Peri's eye could read
Dark tales of many a ruthless deed:
The ruin'd maid — the shrine profaned —
Oaths broken — and the threshold stain'd
With blood of guests! — there written, all,
Black as the damning drops that fall
From the denouncing Angel's pen,
Ere Mercy weeps them out again.

Yet tranquil now that man of crime
(As if the balmy evening time
Soften'd his spirit) look'd and lay,
Watching the rosy infant's play: —
Though still, whene'er his eye by chance
Fell on the boy's, its lurid glance
Met that unclouded joyous gaze,—
As torches that have burnt all night
Through some impure and godless rite,
Encounter morning's glorious rays.

But hark! the vesper call to prayer,
As slow the orb of daylight sets,
Is rising sweetly on the air,
From Syria's thousand minarets!
The boy has started from the bed
Of flowers where he had laid his head,
And down upon the fragrant sod
Kneels, with his forehead to the south
Lisping the eternal name of God

From Purity's own cherub mouth,
And looking, while his hands and eyes
Are lifted to the glowing skies,
Like a stray babe of Paradise,
Just lighted on that flowery plain,
And seeking for its home again.
Oh, 't was a sight — that Heaven — that child —
A scene which might have well beguiled
Even haughty Eblis of a sigh
For glories lost and peace gone by!

And how felt he, the wretched man
Reclining there — while memory ran
O'er many a year of guilt and strife,
Flew o'er the dark flood of his life,
Nor found one sunny resting-place,
Nor brought him back one branch of grace!
'There was a time,' he said, in mild
Heart-humbled tones, 'thou blessed child!
When, young and haply pure as thou,
I look'd and pray'd like thee; but now'—
He hung his head: each nobler aim,
And hope, and feeling, which had slept
From boyhood's hour, that instant came
Fresh o'er him, and he wept — he wept!

Blest tears of soul-felt penitence!
In whose benign redeeming flow
Is felt the first, the only sense
Of guiltless joy that guilt can know.

'There's a drop,' said the Peri, 'that down from the moon
Falls through the withering airs of June
Upon Egypt's land, of so healing a power,
So balmy a virtue, that e'en in the hour
The drop descends, contagion dies,
And health re-animates earth and skies!—
Oh, is it not thus, thou man of sin,
The precious tears of repentance fall?
Though foul thy fiery plagues within,
One heavenly drop hath dispell'd them all!'

And now, behold him kneeling there
By the child's side, in humble prayer,
While the same sunbeam shines upon
The guilty and the guiltless one,
And hymns of joy proclaim through Heaven
The triumph of a Soul Forgiven!
'T was when the golden orb had set,
While on their knees they linger'd yet,
There fell a light more lovely far
Than ever came from sun or star,
Upon the tear that, warm and meek,
Dew'd that repentant sinner's cheek.
To mortal eye this light might seem
A northern flash or meteor beam,—
But well the enraptured Peri knew
'T was a bright smile the Angel threw
From Heaven's gate, to hail that tear
Her harbinger of glory near!

'Joy, joy forever! my task is done—
The Gates are pass'd, and Heaven is won!
Oh, am I not happy? I am, I am—
To thee, sweet Eden! how dark and sad
Are the diamond turrets of Shadukiam,
And the fragrant bowers of Amberabad!
Farewell, ye odours of Earth, that die
Passing away like a lover's sigh!
My feast is now of the Tooba Tree,
Whose scent is the breath of Eternity!
Farewell, ye vanishing flowers, that shone
In my fairy wreath, so bright and brief!
Oh, what are the brightest that e'er have blown,
To the lote-tree, springing by Alla's throne,
Whose flowers have a soul in every leaf!
Joy, joy forever!—my task is done!—
The Gates are pass'd, and Heaven is won!'

"And this," said the Great Chamberlain, "is poetry! this flimsy manufacture of the brain, which, in comparison with the lofty and durable monuments of genius, is as the gold filigree-work of Zamara beside the eternal architecture of Egypt!" After this gorgeous sentence, which, with a few more of the same kind, Fadladeen kept by him for rare and important occasions, he proceeded to the anatomy of the short poem just recited. The lax and easy kind of metre in which it was written ought to be denounced, he said, as one of the leading causes of the alarming growth of poetry in our times. If some check were not given to this lawless facility, we should soon be overrun by a race of bards as numerous and as shallow as the hundred-and-twenty thousand streams of Basra. They who succeeded in this style deserved chastisement for their very success,—as warriors have been punished, even after gaining a victory, because they had taken the liberty of gaining it in an irregular or unestablished manner. What, then, was to be said to those who failed? to those who presumed, as in the present lamentable instance, to imitate the license and ease of the bolder sons of song, without any of that grace or vigour which gave a dignity even to negligence,—who, like them, flung the jereed carelessly, but not, like them, to the mark;—"and who," said he, raising his voice to excite a proper degree of wakefulness in his hearers, "contrive to appear heavy and constrained in the midst of all the latitude they allow themselves, like one of those young pagans that dance before the Princess, who is ingenious enough to move as if her limbs were fettered, in a pair of the lightest and loosest drawers of Masulipatam!"

It was but little suitable, he continued, to the grave march of criticism, to follow this fantastical Peri, of whom they had just heard, through all her flights and adventures between earth and Heaven; but he could not help adverting to the puerile conceitedness of the Three Gifts which she is supposed to carry to the skies,—a drop of blood, forsooth, a sigh, and a tear! How the first of these articles was delivered into the Angel's "radiant hand" he professed himself at a loss to discover; and as to the safe carriage of the sigh and the tear, such Peris and such poets were beings by far too incomprehensible for him even to guess how they managed such matters. "But, in short," said he, "it is a waste of time and patience to dwell longer upon a thing so incurably frivolous,—puny even among its own puny race, and such as only the Banyan Hospital for Sick Insects should undertake."

In vain did Lalla Rookh try to soften this inexorable critic; in vain did she resort to her most eloquent common-places,—reminding him that poets were a timid and sensitive race, whose sweetness was not to be drawn forth, like that of the fragrant grass near the Ganges, by crushing and trampling upon them;—that severity often extinguished every chance of the perfection which it demanded; and that, after all, perfection was like the Mountain of the Talisman,—no one had ever yet reached its summit. Neither these gentle axioms, nor the still gentler looks with which they were inculcated, could lower for one instant the elevation of Fadladeen's eyebrows, or charm him into anything like encouragement, or even toleration of her poet. Toleration, indeed, was not among the weaknesses of Fadladeen:—he carried the same spirit into matters of poetry and of religion, and though little versed in the beauties or sublimities of either, was a perfect master of the art of persecution in both. His zeal was the same, too, in either pursuit,—whether the game before him was pagans or poetasters, worshippers of cows or writers of epics.

They had now arrived at the splendid city of Lahore, whose mausoleums and shrines, magnificent and numberless, where Death appeared to share equal honours with Heaven, would have powerfully affected the heart and imagination of Lalla Rookh, if feelings more of this earth had not taken entire possession of her already. She was here met by messengers, despatched from Cashmere, who informed her that the King had arrived in the Valley, and was himself superintending the sumptuous preparations that were then making in the Saloons of the Shalimar for her reception. The chill she felt on receiving this intelligence,—which to a bride whose heart was free and light would have brought only images of affection and pleasure,—convinced her that her peace was gone forever, and that she was in love, irretrievably in love, with young Feramorz. The veil had fallen off in which this passion at first disguises itself, and to know that she loved was now as painful as to love without knowing it had been delicious. Feramorz, too,—what misery would be his, if the sweet hours of intercourse so imprudently allowed them should have stolen into his heart the same fatal fascination as into hers; if, notwithstanding her rank, and the modest homage he always paid to it, even he should have yielded to the influence of those long and happy interviews, where music, poetry, the delightful scenes of nature, —all had tended to bring their hearts close together, and to waken by every means that too ready passion, which often, like the young of the desert-bird, is warmed into life by the eyes alone! She saw but one way to preserve herself from being culpable as well as unhappy, and this, however painful, she was resolved to adopt. Feramorz must no more be admitted to her presence. To have strayed so far into the dangerous labyrinth was wrong, but to linger in it, while the clew was yet in her hand, would be criminal. Though the heart she had to offer to the King of Bucharia might be cold and broken, it should at least be pure; and she must only endeavour to forget the short dream of happiness she had enjoyed,—like that Arabian shepherd, who, in wandering into the wilderness, caught a glimpse of the Gardens of Irim, and then lost them again forever!

The arrival of the young Bride at Lahore was celebrated in the most enthusiastic manner. The Rajas and Omras in her train, who had kept at a certain distance during the journey, and never encamped nearer to the Princess than was strictly necessary for her safeguard, here rode in splendid cavalcade through the city, and distributed the most costly presents to the crowd. Engines were erected in all the squares, which cast forth showers of confectionery among the people; while the artisans, in chariots adorned with tinsel and flying streamers, exhibited the badges of their respective trades through the streets. Such brilliant displays of life and pageantry among the palaces, and domes, and gilded minarets of Lahore, made the city altogether like a place of enchantment,—particularly on the day when Lalla Rookh set out again upon her journey, when she was accompanied to the gate by all the fairest and richest of the nobility, and rode along between ranks of beautiful boys and girls, who kept waving over their heads plates of gold and silver flowers, and then threw them around to be gathered by the populace.

For many days after their departure from Lahore, a considerable degree of gloom hung over the whole party. Lalla Rookh, who had intended to make illness her excuse for not admitting the young minstrel, as usual, to the pavilion, soon found that to feign indisposition was unnecessary; Fadladeen felt the loss of the good road they had hitherto travelled, and was very near cursing Jehan-Guire (of blessed memory!) for not having continued his delectable alley of trees, at least as far as the mountains of Cashmere; while the Ladies, who had nothing now to do all day but to be fanned by peacocks' feathers and listen to Fadladeen, seemed heartily weary of the life they led, and, in spite of all the Great Chamberlain's criticisms, were so tasteless as to wish for the poet again. One evening, as they were proceeding to their place of rest for the night, the Princess, who, for the freer enjoyment of the air, had mounted her favourite Arabian palfrey, in passing by a small grove heard the notes of a lute from within its leaves, and a voice, which she but too well knew, singing the following words:—

Tell me not of joys above,
If that world can give no bliss,
Truer, happier than the Love
Which enslaves our souls in this.

Tell me not of Houris' eyes;—
Far from me their dangerous glow,
If those looks that light the skies
Wound like some that burn below.

Who, that feels what Love is here,
All its falsehood,—all its pain,—
Would, for even Elysium's sphere,
Risk the fatal dream again?

Who, that midst a desert's heat
Sees the waters fade away,
Would not rather die than meet
Streams again as false as they?

The tone of melancholy defiance in which these words were uttered, went to Lalla Rookh's heart; and as she reluctantly rode on, she could not help feeling it to be a sad but still sweet certainty, that Feramorz was to the full as enamoured and miserable as herself.

The place where they encamped that evening was the first delightful spot they had come to since they left Lahore. On one side of them was a grove full of small Hindoo temples, and planted with the most graceful trees of the East; where the tamarind, the cassia, and the silken plantains of Ceylon, were mingled in rich contrast with the high fan-like foliage of the Palmyra,—that favourite tree of the luxurious bird that lights up the chambers of its nest with fire-flies. In the middle of the lawn where the pavilion stood there was a tank surrounded by small mango-trees, on the clear cold waters of which floated multitudes of the beautiful red lotus; while at a distance stood the ruins of a strange and awful-looking tower, which seemed old enough to have been the temple of some religion no longer known, and which spoke the voice of desolation in the midst of all that bloom and loveliness. This singular ruin excited the wonder and conjectures of all. Lalla Rookh guessed in vain, and the all-pretending Fadladeen, who had never till this journey been beyond the precincts of Delhi, was proceeding most learnedly to show that he knew nothing whatever about the matter, when one of the Ladies suggested that perhaps Feramorz could satisfy their curiosity. They were now approaching his native mountains, and this tower might perhaps be a relic of some of those dark superstitions which had prevailed in that country before the light of Islam dawned upon it. The Chamberlain, who usually preferred his own ignorance to the best knowledge that anyone else could give him, was by no means pleased with this officious reference, and the Princess, too, was about to interpose a faint word of objection; but, before either of them could speak, a slave was despatched for Feramorz, who, in a very few minutes, made his appearance before them,—looking so pale and unhappy in Lalla Rookh's eyes, that she repented already of her cruelty in having so long excluded him.

That venerable tower, he told them, was the remains of an ancient Fire-temple, built by those Ghebers or Persians of the old religion, who, many hundred years since, had fled hither from their Arab conquerors, preferring liberty and their altars in a foreign land to the alternative of apostasy or persecution in their own. It was impossible, he added, not to feel interested in the many glorious but unsuccessful struggles which had been made by these original natives of Persia to cast off the yoke of their bigoted conquerors. Like their own Fire in the Burning Field at Bakou, when suppressed in one place they had but broken out with fresh flame in another; and, as a native of Cashmere, of that fair and Holy Valley which had in the same manner become the prey of strangers, and seen her ancient shrines and native princes swept away before the march of her intolerant invaders, he felt a sympathy, he owned, with the sufferings of the persecuted Ghebers, which every monument like this before them but tended more powerfully to awaken.

It was the first time that Feramorz had ever ventured upon so much prose before Fadladeen, and it may easily be conceived what effect such prose as this must have produced upon that most orthodox and most pagan-hating personage. He sat for some minutes aghast, ejaculating only at intervals, "Bigoted conquerors! sympathy with Fire-worshippers!"—while Feramorz, happy to take advantage of this almost speechless horror of the Chamberlain, proceeded to say that he knew a melancholy story, connected with the events of one of those struggles of the brave Fire-worshippers against their Arab masters, which, if the evening was not too far advanced, he should have much pleasure in being allowed to relate to the Princess. It was impossible for Lalla Rookh to refuse: he had never before looked half so animated, and when he spoke of the Holy Valley, his eyes had sparkled, she thought, like the talismanic characters on the scimitar of Solomon. Her consent was therefore most readily granted; and while Fadladeen sat in unspeakable dismay, expecting treason and abomination in every line, the poet thus began his story of the Fire-worshippers.

THE FIRE-WORSHIPPERS.

'T is moonlight over Oman's Sea;
Her banks of pearl and balmy isles
Bask in the night-beam beauteously,
And her blue waters sleep in smiles.
'T is moonlight in Harmozia's walls,
And through her Emir's porphyry halls,
Where, some hours since, was heard the swell
Of trumpet and the clash of zel,
Bidding the bright-eyed sun farewell,—
The peaceful sun, whom better suits
The music of the bulbul's nest,
Or the light touch of lovers' lutes,
To sing him to his golden rest.
All hush'd — there's not a breeze in motion:
The shore is silent as the ocean:
If zephyrs come, so light they come
Nor leaf is stirr'd nor wave is driven:
The wind-tower on the Emir's dome
Can hardly win a breath from heaven.

Even he, that tyrant Arab, sleeps
Calm, while a nation round him weeps;
While curses load the air he breathes,
And falchions from unnumber'd sheaths

Are starting to avenge the shame
His race hath brought on Iran's name.
Hard, heartless Chief, unmoved alike
'Mid eyes that weep, and swords that strike;—
One of that saintly, murderous brood,
To carnage and the Koran given,
Who think through unbelievers' blood
Lies their directest path to heaven;—
One who will pause and kneel unshod
In the warm blood his hand hath pour'd,
To mutter o'er some text of God
Engraven on his reeking sword;
Nay, who can coolly note the line,
The letter of those words divine,
To which his blade, with searching art,
Had sunk into its victim's heart!

Just Alla! what must be thy look,
When such a wretch before thee stands
Unblushing, with thy Sacred Book,—
Turning the leaves with blood-stain'd hands,
And wresting from its page sublime
His creed of lust, and hate, and crime:
Even as those bees of Trebizond,
Which, from the sunniest flowers that glad
With their pure smiles the gardens round,
Draw venom forth that drives men mad.

Never did fierce Arabia send
A satrap forth more direly great;

Never was Iran doom'd to bend
Beneath a yoke of deadlier weight.
Her throne had fallen—her pride was crush'd—
Her sons were willing slaves, nor blush'd,
In their own land—no more their own—
To crouch beneath a stranger's throne.
Her towers, where Mithra once had burn'd,
To Moslem shrines—O shame!—were turn'd,
Where slaves, converted by the sword,
Their mean apostate worship pour'd,
And cursed the faith their sires adored.
Yet has she hearts, 'mid all this ill,
O'er all this wreck, high, buoyant still
With hope and vengeance; hearts that yet—
Like gems, in darkness, issuing rays
They've treasured from the sun that's set,—
Beam all the light of long-lost days!
And swords she hath, nor weak nor slow
To second all such hearts can dare;
As he shall know, well, dearly know,
Who sleeps in moonlight luxury there,
Tranquil as if his spirit lay
Becalm'd in Heaven's approving ray.
Sleep on,—for purer eyes than thine
Those waves are hush'd, those planets shine;
Sleep on, and be thy rest unmoved
By the white moonbeam's dazzling power:—
None but the loving and the loved
Should be awake at this sweet hour.

And see — where, high above those rocks
That o'er the deep their shadows fling,
Yon turret stands; where ebon locks,
As glossy as a heron's wing
Upon the turban of a king,
Hang from the lattice, long and wild —
'T is she, that Emir's blooming child,
All truth and tenderness and grace,
Though born of such ungentle race:
An image of Youth's radiant Fountain
Springing in a desolate mountain!

Oh, what a pure and sacred thing
Is beauty, curtain'd from the sight
Of the gross world, illumining
One only mansion with her light!
Unseen by man's disturbing eye,—
The flower that blooms beneath the sea,
Too deep for sunbeams, doth not lie
Hid in more chaste obscurity.
So, Hinda, have thy face and mind,
Like holy mysteries, lain enshrined.
And oh, what transport for a lover
To lift the veil that shades them o'er! —
Like those who, all at once, discover
In the lone deep some fairy shore,
Where mortal never trod before,
And sleep and wake in scented airs
No lip had ever breathed but theirs.

Beautiful are the maids that glide,
On summer-eves, through Yemen's dales,
And bright the glancing looks they hide
Behind their litters' roseate veils;
And brides, as delicate and fair
As the white jasmine flowers they wear,
Hath Yemen in her blissful clime,
Who, lull'd in cool kiosk or bower,
Before their mirrors count the time,
And grow still lovelier every hour.
But never yet hath bride or maid
In Araby's gay Haram smiled,
Whose boasted brightness would not fade
Before Al Hassan's blooming child.

Light as the angel shapes that bless
An infant's dream, yet not the less
Rich in all woman's loveliness;
With eyes so pure, that from their ray
Dark Vice would turn abash'd away,
Blinded like serpents when they gaze
Upon the emerald's virgin blaze;
Yet fill'd with all youth's sweet desires,
Mingling the meek and vestal fires
Of other worlds with all the bliss,
The fond weak tenderness of this:
A soul, too, more than half divine,
Where, through some shades of earthly feeling,
Religion's soften'd glories shine,
Like light through summer foliage stealing,

Shedding a glow of such mild hue,
So warm, and yet so shadowy too,
As makes the very darkness there
More beautiful than light elsewhere.

Such is the maid who, at this hour,
Hath risen from her restless sleep,
And sits alone in that high bower,
Watching the still and shining deep.
Ah! t' was not thus — with tearful eyes
And beating heart — she used to gaze
On the magnificent earth and skies,
In her own land, in happier days.
Why looks she now so anxious down
Among those rocks, whose rugged frown
Blackens the mirror of the deep?
Whom waits she all this lonely night?
Too rough the rocks, too bold the steep,
For man to scale that turret's height! —

So deem'd at least her thoughtful sire,
When high, to catch the cool night-air,
After the day-beam's withering fire,
He built her bower of freshness there,
And had it deck'd with costliest skill,
And fondly thought it safe as fair: —
Think, reverend dreamer! think so still,
Nor wake to learn what Love can dare —
Love, all-defying Love, who sees
No charm in trophies won with ease;

Whose rarest, dearest fruits of bliss
Are pluck'd on Danger's precipice!
Bolder than they who dare not dive
For pearls, but when the sea's at rest,
Love, in the tempest most alive,
Hath ever held that pearl the best
He finds beneath the stormiest water.
Yes — Araby's unrivall'd daughter,
Though high that tower, that rock-way rude,
There's one who, but to kiss thy cheek,
Would climb the untrodden solitude
Of Ararat's tremendous peak,
And think its steeps, though dark and dread,
Heaven's pathways, if to thee they led!
Even now thou seest the flashing spray,
That lights his oar's impatient way;
Even now thou hear'st the sudden shock
Of his swift bark against the rock,
And stretchest down thine arms of snow,
As if to lift him from below!
Like her to whom at dead of night,
The bridegroom, with his locks of light,
Came, in the flush of love and pride,
And scaled the terrace of his bride;
When, as she saw him rashly spring,
And midway up in danger cling,
She flung him down her long black hair,
Exclaiming, breathless, 'There, love, there!'
And scarce did manlier nerve uphold
The hero Zal in that fond hour,

Than wings the youth who, fleet and bold,
Now climbs the rocks to Hinda's bower.
See! light as up their granite steeps
The rock-goats of Arabia clamber,
Fearless from crag to crag he leaps,
And now is in the maiden's chamber.

She loves — but knows not whom she loves,
Nor what his race, nor whence he came,—
Like one who meets, in Indian groves,
Some beauteous bird without a name,
Brought by the last ambrosial breeze
From isles in the undiscover'd seas,
To show his plumage for a day
To wondering eyes, and wing away!
Will he thus fly — her nameless lover?
Alla forbid! 't was by a moon
As fair as this, while singing over
Some ditty to her soft Kanoon,
Alone, at this same witching hour,
She first beheld his radiant eyes
Gleam through the lattice of the bower,
Where nightly now they mix their sighs;
And thought some spirit of the air
(For what could waft a mortal there?)
Was pausing on his moonlit way
To listen to her lonely lay!
This fancy ne'er hath left her mind;
And though, when terror's swoon had past,
She saw a youth, of mortal kind,

Before her in obeisance cast,
Yet often since, when he hath spoken
Strange awful words, and gleams have broken
From his dark eyes, too bright to bear,
Oh, she hath fear'd her soul was given
To some unhallow'd child of air,
Some erring Spirit cast from Heaven,—
Like those angelic youths of old,
Who burn'd for maids of mortal mould,
Bewilder'd, left the glorious skies,
And lost their heaven for woman's eyes.

Fond girl! nor fiend nor angel he
Who woos thy young simplicity;
But one of earth's impassion'd sons,
As warm in love, as fierce in ire,
As the best heart whose current runs
Full of the Day-God's living fire.

But quench'd to-night that ardour seems,
And pale his cheek, and sunk his brow;
Never before, but in her dreams,
Had she beheld him pale as now:
And those were dreams of troubled sleep,
From which 't was joy to wake and weep,—
Visions, that will not be forgot,
But sadden every waking scene,
Like warning ghosts, that leave the spot
All wither'd where they once have been.

'How sweetly,' said the trembling maid,
Of her own gentle voice afraid,
So long had they in silence stood,
Looking upon that tranquil flood,—
'How sweetly does the moonbeam smile
To-night upon yon leafy isle!
Oft, in my fancy's wanderings,
I've wish'd that little isle had wings,
And we, within its fairy bowers,
Were wafted off to seas unknown
Where not a pulse should beat but ours,
And we might live, love, die, alone!
Far from the cruel and the cold,
Where the bright eyes of angels only
Should come around us, to behold
A paradise so pure and lonely!
Would this be world enough for thee?'
Playful she turn'd, that he might see
The passing smile her cheek put on;
But when she mark'd how mournfully
His eyes met hers, that smile was gone,
And, bursting into heartfelt tears,
'Yes, yes,' she cried, 'my hourly fears,
My dreams have boded all too right—
We part—forever part—to-night!
I knew, I knew it could not last—
'T was bright, 't was heavenly, but 't is past!
Oh, ever thus, from childhood's hour
I've seen my fondest hopes decay;
I never loved a tree or flower,

But 't was the first to fade away;
I never nursed a dear gazelle,
To glad me with its soft black eye,
But when it came to know me well,
And love me, it was sure to die!
Now, too, the joy most like divine
Of all I ever dreamt or knew,—
To see thee, hear thee, call thee mine,—
Oh, misery! must I lose that too?
Yet go — on peril's brink we meet:
Those frightful rocks! that treacherous sea!—
No, never come again! — though sweet,
Though heaven, it may be death to thee!
Farewell! and blessings on thy way,
Where'er thou goest, beloved stranger!
Better to sit and watch that ray,
And think thee safe, though far away,
Than have thee near me, and in danger!'

'Danger! — oh, tempt me not to boast!'
The youth exclaim'd — 'Thou little know'st
What he can brave, who, born and nurst
In Danger's paths, has dared her worst;
Upon whose ear the signal word
Of strife and death is hourly breaking;
Who sleeps with head upon the sword
His fever'd hand must grasp in waking.
Danger!'—
'Say on — thou fear'st not then?
And we may meet — oft meet again?'

'Oh, look not so! beneath the skies
I now fear nothing but those eyes.
If aught on earth could charm or force
My spirit from its destined course,
If aught could make this soul forget
The bond to which its seal is set,—
'T would be those eyes: — they, only they,
Could melt that sacred seal away!
But no, 't is fix'd,— mine awful doom
Is fix'd — on this side of the tomb
We meet no more. Why, why did Heaven
Mingle two souls that earth has riven,
Has rent asunder wide as ours?
O Arab maid, as soon the Powers
Of Light and Darkness may combine,
As I be link'd with thee or thine!
Thy Father'——
'Holy Alla save
His gray head from that lightning glance!
Thou know'st him not — he loves the brave;
Nor lives there under heaven's expanse
One who would prize, would worship thee
And thy bold spirit, more than he.
Oft when, in childhood, I have play'd
With the bright falchion by his side,
I've heard him swear his lisping maid
In time should be a warrior's bride.
And still, whene'er at Haram hours
I take him cool sherbets and flowers,
He tells me, when in playful mood,

A hero shall my bridegroom be,
Since maids are best in battle woo'd,
And won with shouts of victory!
Nay, turn not from me — thou alone
Art form'd to make both hearts thine own.
Go — join his sacred ranks: thou know'st
The unholy strife these Persians wage,—
Good Heaven, that frown!—even now thou glow'st
With more than mortal warrior's rage.
Haste to the camp by morning's light,
And when that sword is raised in fight,
Oh, still remember, Love and I
Beneath its shadow trembling lie!
One victory o'er those Slaves of Fire,
Those impious Ghebers, whom my sire
Abhors'——
'Hold, hold! thy words are death!'
The stranger cried, as wild he flung
His mantle back, and show'd beneath
The Gheber belt that round him clung;
'Here, maiden, look — weep — blush to see
All that thy sire abhors in me!
Yes — I am of that impious race,
Those Slaves of Fire, who, morn and even,
Hail their Creator's dwelling-place
Among the living lights of heaven:
Yes — I am of that outcast few,
To Iran and to vengeance true,
Who curse the hour your Arabs came
To desolate our shrines of flame,

And swear, before God's burning eye,
To break our country's chains, or die!
Thy bigot sire,—nay, tremble not,—
He who gave birth to those dear eyes,
With me is sacred as the spot
From which our fires of worship rise!
But know—'t was he I sought that night,
When, from my watch-boat on the sea,
I caught this turret's glimmering light,
And up the rude rocks desperately
Rush'd to my prey:—thou know'st the rest:
I climb'd the gory vulture's nest,
And found a trembling dove within;
Thine, thine the victory—thine the sin—
If Love hath made one thought his own,
That Vengeance claims first—last—alone!
Oh, had we never, never met,
Or could this heart e'en now forget
How link'd, how bless'd we might have been,
Had fate not frown'd so dark between!
Hadst thou been born a Persian maid,
In neighbouring valleys had we dwelt,
Through the same fields in childhood play'd,
At the same kindling altar knelt,
Then, then, while all those nameless ties,
In which the charm of Country lies,
Had round our hearts been hourly spun,
Till Iran's cause and thine were one;
While in thy lute's awakening sigh
I heard the voice of days gone by,

And saw, in every smile of thine,
Returning hours of glory shine;
While the wrong'd Spirit of our Land
Lived, look'd, and spoke her wrongs thro' thee,
God! who could then this sword withstand?
Its very flash were victory!
But now — estranged, divorced forever,
Far as the grasp of Fate can sever:
Our only ties what love has wove,—
In faith, friends, country, sunder'd wide,—
And then, then only, true to love,
When false to all that's dear beside!
Thy father, Iran's deadliest foe —
Thyself perhaps, even now — but no —
Hate never look'd so lovely yet!
No — sacred to thy soul will be
The land of him who could forget
All but that bleeding land for thee.
When other eyes shall see, unmoved,
Her widows mourn, her warriors fall,
Thou 'lt think how well one Gheber loved,
And for his sake thou 'lt weep for all!
But look '——
With sudden start he turn'd
And pointed to the distant wave,
Where lights, like charnel meteors, burn'd
Bluely, as o'er some seaman's grave;
And fiery darts, at intervals,
Flew up all sparkling from the main,
As if each star that nightly falls

Were shooting back to heaven again.
'My signal lights! I must away —
Both, both are ruin'd, if I stay.
Farewell,— sweet life! thou cling'st in vain,—
Now, Vengeance, I am thine again!'

Fiercely he broke away, nor stopp'd,
Nor look'd,— but from the lattice dropp'd
Down 'mid the pointed crags beneath,
As if he fled from love to death.
While pale and mute young Hinda stood,
Nor moved, till in the silent flood
A momentary plunge below
Startled her from her trance of woe;
Shrieking, she to the lattice flew,—
'I come — I come — if in that tide
Thou sleep'st to-night, I'll sleep there too,
In death's cold wedlock, by thy side.
Oh, I would ask no happier bed
Then the chill wave my love lies under;
Sweeter to rest together dead,
Far sweeter, than to live asunder!'
But no, their hour is not yet come;
Again she sees his pinnace fly,
Wafting him fleetly to his home,
Where'er that ill-starr'd home may lie;
And calm and smooth it seem'd to win
Its moonlit way before the wind,
As if it bore all peace within,
Nor left one breaking heart behind!

THE Princess, whose heart was sad enough already, could have wished that Feramorz had chosen a less melancholy story; as it is only to the happy that tears are a luxury. Her ladies, however, were by no means sorry that love was once more the Poet's theme; for whenever he spoke of love, they said, his voice was as sweet as if he had chewed the leaves of that enchanted tree which grows over the tomb of the musician Tan-Sein.

Their road all the morning had lain through a very dreary country,— through valleys covered with a low bushy jungle, where, in more than one place, the awful signal of the bamboo staff, with the white flag at its top, reminded the traveller that, in that very spot, the tiger had made some human creature his victim. It was, therefore, with much pleasure that they arrived at sunset in a safe and lovely glen, and encamped under one of those holy trees whose smooth columns and spreading roofs seem to destine them for natural temples of religion. Beneath this spacious shade, some pious hands had erected a row of pillars ornamented with the most beautiful porcelain, which now supplied the use of mirrors to the young maidens, as they adjusted their hair in descending from the palankeens. Here, while, as usual, the Princess sat listening anxiously, with Fadladeen, in one of his loftiest moods of criticism, by her side, the young Poet, leaning against a branch of the tree, thus continued his story: —

THE morn hath risen clear and calm,
And o'er the Green Sea palely shines,
Revealing Bahrein's groves of palm,
And lighting Kishma's amber vines.
Fresh smell the shores of Araby,
While breezes from the Indian sea
Blow round Selama's sainted cape,
And curl the shining flood beneath,
Whose waves are rich with many a grape,
And cocoa-nut and flowery wreath,
Which pious seamen, as they pass'd,
Had toward that holy headland cast —
Oblations to the Genii there,
For gentle skies and breezes fair!
The nightingale now bends her flight
From the high trees, where all the night
She sung so sweet, with none to listen;
And hides her from the morning star
Where thickets of pomegranate glisten
In the clear dawn,— bespangled o'er
With dew, whose night-drops would not stain
The best and brightest scimitar
That ever youthful Sultan wore
On the first morning of his reign.

And see! the Sun himself! On wings
Of glory up the East he springs.
Angel of Light! who, from the time

Those heavens began their march sublime,
Hath first of all the starry choir
Trod in his Maker's steps of fire!
Where are the days, thou wondrous sphere,
When Iran, like a sun-flower, turn'd
To meet that eye where'er it burn'd?
When, from the banks of Bendemeer
To the nut-groves of Samarcand,
Thy temples flamed o'er all the land?
Where are they? ask the shades of them
Who, on Cadessia's bloody plains,
Saw fierce invaders pluck the gem
From Iran's broken diadem,
And bind her ancient faith in chains:—
Ask the poor exile, cast alone
On foreign shores, unloved, unknown,
Beyond the Caspian's Iron Gates,
Or on the snowy Mossian mountains,
Far from his beauteous land of dates,
Her jasmine bowers and sunny fountains,—
Yet happier so than if he trod
His own beloved but blighted sod,
Beneath a despot stranger's nod!—
Oh, he would rather houseless roam
Where Freedom and his God may lead,
Than be the sleekest slave at home
That crouches to the conqueror's creed!

Is Iran's pride then gone forever,
Quench'd with the flame in Mithra's caves?

No — she has sons, that never, never,
  Will stoop to be the Moslem's slaves,
  While heaven has light or earth has graves,—
Spirits of fire, that brood not long,
But flash resentment back for wrong;
And hearts where, slow but deep, the seeds
Of vengeance ripen into deeds,
Till, in some treacherous hour of calm,
They burst, like Zeilan's giant palm,
Whose buds fly open with a sound
That shakes the pigmy forests round!

Yes, Emir! he who scaled that tower,
  And, had he reach'd thy slumbering breast,
Had taught thee in a Gheber's power
  How safe e'en tyrant heads may rest,
Is one of many, brave as he,
Who loathe thy haughty race and thee;
Who, though they know the strife is vain,
Who, though they know the riven chain
Snaps but to enter in the heart
Of him who rends its links apart,
Yet dare the issue,— blest to be
E'en for one bleeding moment free,
And die in pangs of liberty!
Thou know'st them well — 't is some moons since
  Thy turban'd troops and blood-red flags,
Thou satrap of a bigot Prince!
  Have swarm'd among these Green Sea crags;
Yet here, e'en here, a sacred band,—

Ay, in the portal of that land
Thou, Arab, dar'st to call thine own,—
Their spears across thy path have thrown;
Here, ere the winds half wing'd thee o'er,
Rebellion braved thee from the shore.

Rebellion! foul dishonouring word,
Whose wrongful blight so oft has stain'd
The holiest cause that tongue or sword
Of mortal ever lost or gain'd!
How many a spirit, born to bless,
Hath sunk beneath that withering name,
Whom but a day's, an hour's success
Had wafted to eternal fame!
As exhalations, when they burst
From the warm earth, if chill'd at first,
If check'd in soaring from the plain,
Darken to fogs and sink again;
But, if they once triumphant spread
Their wings above the mountain-head,
Become enthroned in upper air,
And turn to sun-bright glories there!

And who is he, that wields the might
Of Freedom on the Green Sea brink,
Before whose sabre's dazzling light
The eyes of Yemen's warriors wink?
Who comes, embower'd in the spears
Of Kerman's hardy mountaineers?
Those mountaineers that truest, last,

Cling to their country's ancient rites,
As if that God, whose eyelids cast
Their closing gleam on Iran's heights,
Among her snowy mountains threw
The last light of his worship too!

'T is Hafed — name of fear, whose sound
Chills like the muttering of a charm! —
Shout but that awful name around,
And palsy shakes the manliest arm!
'T is Hafed, most accursed and dire
(So rank'd by Moslem hate and ire)
Of all the rebel Sons of Fire;
Of whose malign, tremendous power,
The Arabs, at their mid-watch hour,
Such tales of fearful wonder tell,
That each affrighted sentinel
Pulls down his cowl upon his eyes,
Lest Hafed in the midst should rise!
A man, they say, of monstrous birth,
A mingled race of flame and earth,
Sprung from those old enchanted kings,
Who, in their fairy helms, of yore,
A feather from the mystic wings
Of the Simoorgh resistless wore;
And gifted by the Fiends of Fire,
Who groan'd to see their shrines expire,
With charms that, all in vain withstood,
Would drown the Koran's light in blood!

Such were the tales that won belief,
And such the colouring Fancy gave
To a young, warm, and dauntless Chief,—
One who, no more than mortal brave,
Fought for the land his soul adored,
For happy homes and altars free,—
His only talisman, the sword,
His only spell-word, Liberty!
One of that ancient hero line,
Along whose glorious current shine
Names that have sanctified their blood,—
As Lebanon's small mountain-flood
Is render'd holy by the ranks
Of sainted cedars on its banks.
'T was not for him to crouch the knee
Tamely to Moslem tyranny;
'T was not for him, whose soul was cast
In the bright mould of ages past,
Whose melancholy spirit, fed
With all the glories of the dead,
Though framed for Iran's happiest years,
Was born among her chains and tears!—
'T was not for him to swell the crowd
Of slavish heads, that shrinking bow'd
Before the Moslem as he pass'd,
Like shrubs beneath the poison-blast!—
No, far he fled—indignant fled
The pageant of his country's shame,
While every tear her children shed
Fell on his soul like drops of flame;

And, as a lover hails the dawn
Of a first smile, so welcomed he
The sparkle of the first sword drawn
For Vengeance and for Liberty!

But vain was valour — vain the flower
Of Kerman, in that deathful hour,
Against Al Hassan's whelming power.
In vain they met him, helm to helm,
Upon the threshold of that realm
He came in bigot pomp to sway,
And with their corpses block'd his way,—
In vain — for every lance they raised,
Thousands around the Conqueror blazed;
For every arm that lined their shore,
Myriads of slaves were wafted o'er,—
A bloody, bold, and countless crowd,
Before whose swarm as fast they bow'd
As dates beneath the locust cloud.

There stood — but one short league away
From old Harmozia's sultry bay —
A rocky mountain, o'er the Sea
Of Oman beetling awfully:
A last and solitary link
Of those stupendous chains that reach
From the broad Caspian's reedy brink
Down winding to the Green Sea beach.
Around its base the bare rocks stood,
Like naked giants in the flood,

As if to guard the Gulf across;
While, on its peak, that braved the sky,
A ruin'd Temple tower'd, so high
That oft the sleeping albatross
Struck the wild ruins with her wing,
And from her cloud-rock'd slumbering
Started — to find man's dwelling there
In her own silent fields of air!
Beneath, terrific caverns gave
Dark welcome to each stormy wave
That dash'd, like midnight revellers, in;
And such the strange mysterious din
At times throughout those caverns roll'd,
And such the fearful wonders told
Of restless sprites imprison'd there,
That bold were Moslem who would dare,
At twilight hour, to steer his skiff
Beneath the Gheber's lonely cliff.

On the land side, those towers sublime,
That seem'd above the grasp of Time,
Were sever'd from the haunts of men
By a wide, deep, and wizard glen,
So fathomless, so full of gloom,
No eye could pierce the void between:
It seem'd a place where Gholes might come
With their foul banquets from the tomb,
And in its caverns feed unseen.
Like distant thunder, from below,
The sound of many torrents came,

Too deep for eye or ear to know
If 't were the sea's imprison'd flow,
  Or floods of ever-restless flame.
For, each ravine, each rocky spire
Of that vast mountain stood on fire;
And, though forever past the days
When God was worshipp'd in the blaze
That from its lofty altar shone,—
Though fled the priests, the votaries gone,—
Still did the mighty flame burn on,
Through chance and change, through good and ill,
Like its own God's eternal will,
Deep, constant, bright, unquenchable!

Thither the vanquish'd Hafed led
  His little army's last remains;
'Welcome, terrific glen!' he said,
'Thy gloom, that Eblis' self might dread,
  Is Heaven to him who flies from chains!'
O'er a dark narrow bridge-way, known
To him and to his Chiefs alone,
They cross'd the chasm and gain'd the towers,—
'This home,' he cried, 'at least, is ours;
Here we may bleed, unmock'd by hymns
  Of Moslem triumph o'er our head;
Here we may fall, nor leave our limbs
  To quiver to the Moslem's tread.
Stretch'd on this rock while vultures' beaks
Are whetted on our yet warm cheeks,
Here — happy that no tyrant's eye
Gloats on our torments — we may die!'

'T was night when to those towers they came,
And gloomily the fitful flame,
That from the ruin'd altar broke,
Glared on his features, as he spoke:
'T is o'er — what men could do, we've done:
If Iran will look tamely on,
And see her priests, her warriors driven
Before a sensual bigot's nod,
A wretch who shrines his lusts in heaven,
And makes a pander of his God;
If her proud sons, her high-born souls,
Men in whose veins — oh, last disgrace! —
The blood of Zal and Rustam rolls,—
If they will court this upstart race,
And turn from Mithra's ancient ray,
To kneel at shrines of yesterday;
If they will crouch to Iran's foes,
Why, let them — till the land's despair
Cries out to Heaven, and bondage grows
Too vile for e'en the vile to bear!
Till shame at last, long hidden, burns
Their inmost core, and conscience turns
Each coward tear the slave lets fall
Back on his heart in drops of gall.
But here, at least, our arms unchain'd,
And souls that thraldom never stain'd;
This spot, at least, no foot of slave
Or satrap ever yet profaned;
And though but few,— though fast the wave
Of life is ebbing from our veins,

Enough for vengeance still remains!
As panthers, after set of sun,
Rush from the roots of Lebanon
Across the dark sea-robber's way,
We 'll bound upon our startled prey;
And when some hearts that proudest swell
Have felt our falchion's last farewell,—
When Hope's expiring throb is o'er,
And e'en despair can prompt no more,—
This spot shall be the sacred grave
Of the last few who, vainly brave,
Die for the land they cannot save!'

His Chiefs stood round — each shining blade
Upon the broken altar laid;
And though so wild and desolate
Those courts, where once the Mighty sate,
Nor longer on those mouldering towers
Was seen the feast of fruits and flowers,
With which of old the Magi fed
The wandering Spirits of their Dead;
Though neither priest nor rites were there,
  Nor charmed leaf of pure pomegranate;
Nor hymn, nor censer's fragrant air,
  Nor symbol of their worshipp'd planet;
Yet the same God that heard their sires
Heard them, while on that altar's fires
They swore the latest, holiest deed
Of the few hearts still left to bleed
Should be, in Iran's injured name,

To die upon that Mount of Flame —
The last of all her patriot line,
Before her last untrampled Shrine!

Brave suffering souls! they little knew
How many a tear their injuries drew
From one weak maid, one gentle foe,
Whom love first touch'd with others' woe,—
Whose life, as free from thought as sin,
Slept like a lake, till Love threw in
His talisman, and woke the tide,
And spread its trembling circles wide.
Once, Emir! thine unheeding child,
'Mid all this havoc, bloom'd and smiled,—
Tranquil as on some battle plain
The Persian lily shines and towers,
Before the combat's reddening stain
Hath fallen upon her golden flowers.
Light-hearted maid, unawed, unmoved,
While Heaven but spared the sire she loved,
Once at thine evening tales of blood
Unlistening and aloof she stood,—
And oft, when thou hast paced along
Thy Haram halls with furious heat,
Hast thou not cursed her cheerful song,
That came across thee, calm and sweet? —
Like lutes of angels, touch'd so near
Hell's confines, that the damn'd can hear!

Far other feelings Love hath brought,—
Her soul all flame, her brow all sadness,

She now has but the one dear thought,
And thinks that o'er, almost to madness!
Oft does her sinking heart recall
His words — 'For my sake weep for all';
And bitterly, as day on day
Of rebel carnage fast succeeds,
She weeps a lover snatch'd away
In every Gheber wretch that bleeds:
There 's not a sabre meets her eye,
But with his life-blood seems to swim;
There 's not an arrow wings the sky,
But fancy turns its point to him.
No more she brings with footstep light
Al Hassan's falchion for the fight;
And had he look'd with clearer sight,
Had not the mists that ever rise
From a foul spirit dimm'd his eyes,
He would have mark'd her shuddering frame,
When from the field of blood he came,
The faltering speech — the look estranged —
Voice, step, and life, and beauty changed,—
He would have mark'd all this, and known
Such change is wrought by Love alone!

Ah, not the Love, that should have bless'd
So young, so innocent a breast;
Not the pure, open, prosperous Love,
That, pledged on earth and seal'd above,
Grows in the world's approving eyes,
In friendship's smile and home's caress,

Collecting all the heart's sweet ties
Into one knot of happiness!
No, Hinda, no,— thy fatal flame
Is nursed in silence, sorrow, shame;
A passion, without hope or pleasure,
In thy soul's darkness buried deep,
It lies, like some ill-gotten treasure,—
Some idol, without shrine or name,
O'er which its pale-eyed votaries keep
Unholy watch, while others sleep.

Seven nights have darken'd Oman's sea,
Since last, beneath the moonlight ray,
She saw his light oar rapidly
Hurry her Gheber's bark away;
And still she goes, at midnight hour,
To weep alone in that high bower,
And watch and look along the deep
For him whose smiles first made her weep:
But watching, weeping, all was vain,
She never saw his bark again.
The owlet's solitary cry,
The night-hawk flitting darkly by,
And oft the hateful carrion bird,
Heavily flapping his clogg'd wing,
Which reek'd with that day's banquetting —
Was all she saw, was all she heard.

'T is the eighth morn. Al Hassan's brow
Is brighten'd with unusual joy;

What mighty mischief glads him now,
Who never smiles but to destroy?
The sparkle upon Herkend's Sea,
When toss'd at midnight furiously,
Tells not of wreck and ruin nigh,
More surely than that smiling eye!
'Up, daughter, up! the Kerna's breath
Has blown a blast would waken death,
And yet thou sleep'st; — up, child, and see
This blessed day for Heaven and me,
A day more rich in Pagan blood
Than ever flash'd o'er Oman's flood!
Before another dawn shall shine,
His head — heart — limbs — will all be mine;
This very night his blood shall steep
These hands all over ere I sleep!' —
'His blood!' she faintly scream'd, her mind
Still singling one from all mankind. —
'Yes — spite of his ravines and towers,
Hafed, my child, this night is ours:
Thanks to all-conquering treachery,
Without whose aid the links accurst,
That bind these impious slaves, would be
Too strong for Alla's self to burst!
That rebel fiend, whose blade has spread
My path with piles of Moslem dead,
Whose baffling spells had almost driven
Back from their course the Swords of Heaven,
This night, with all his band, shall know
How deep an Arab's steel can go,

When God and Vengeance speed the blow.
And — Prophet! by that holy wreath
Thou worest on Ohod's field of death,
I swear, for every sob that parts
In anguish from these heathen hearts,
A gem from Persia's plunder'd mines
Shall glitter on thy Shrine of Shrines!
But, ha! — she sinks — that look so wild —
Those livid lips,— my child, my child,
This life of blood befits not thee,
And thou must back to Araby.
Ne'er had I risk'd thy timid sex
In scenes that man himself might dread,
Had I not hoped our every tread
Would be on prostrate Persian necks —
Curst race, they offer swords instead!
But, cheer thee, maid,— the wind that now
Is blowing o'er thy feverish brow,
To-day shall waft thee from the shore;
And, ere a drop of this night's gore
Have time to chill in yonder towers,
Thou 'lt see thine own sweet Arab bowers!'

His bloody boast was all too true:
There lurk'd one wretch among the few
Whom Hafed's eagle eye could count
Around him on that fiery mount,—
One miscreant who for gold betray'd
The pathway through the valley's shade
To those high towers where Freedom stood

In her last hold of flame and blood.
Left on the field that dreadful night,
When, sallying from their sacred height,
The Ghebers fought hope's farewell fight,
He lay — but died not with the brave:
That sun, which should have gilt his grave,
Saw him a traitor and a slave: —
And, while the few, who thence return'd
To their high rocky fortress, mourn'd
For him among the matchless dead
They left behind on glory's bed,
He lived, and, in the face of morn,
Laugh'd them and Faith and Heaven to scorn.

Oh, for a tongue to curse the slave,
Whose treason, like a deadly blight,
Comes o'er the councils of the brave,
And blasts them in their hour of might!
May Life's unblessed cup for him
Be drugg'd with treacheries to the brim,—
With hopes, that but allure to fly,
With joys, that vanish while he sips,
Like Dead Sea fruits, that tempt the eye,
But turn to ashes on the lips!
His country's curse, his children's shame,
Outcast of virtue, peace, and fame,
May he, at last, with lips of flame
On the parch'd desert thirsting die,—
While lakes that shone in mockery nigh
Are fading off, untouch'd, untasted,

Like the once glorious hopes he blasted!
And when from earth his spirit flies,
  Just Prophet, let the damn'd one dwell
Full in the sight of Paradise,
  Beholding Heaven, and feeling Hell!

LALLA ROOKH had, the night before, been visited by a dream, which, in spite of the impending fate of poor Hafed, made her heart more than usually cheerful during the morning, and gave her cheeks all the freshened animation of a flower that the Bid-musk had just passed over. She fancied that she was sailing on that Eastern Ocean, where the sea-gipsies, who live forever on the water, enjoy a perpetual summer in wandering from isle to isle, when she saw a small gilded bark approaching her. It was like one of those boats which the Maldivian islanders send adrift at the mercy of winds and waves, loaded with perfumes, flowers, and odoriferous wood, as an offering to the Spirit whom they call King of the Sea. At first, this little bark appeared to be empty, but, on coming nearer —

She had proceeded thus far in relating the dream to her Ladies, when Feramorz appeared at the door of the pavilion. In his presence, of course, everything else was forgotten, and the continuance of the story was instantly requested by all. Fresh wood of aloes was set to burn in the cassolets; the violet sherbets were hastily handed round; and after a short prelude on his lutė, in the pathetic measure of Nava, which is always used to express the lamentations of absent lovers, the Poet thus continued.

The day is lowering,— stilly black
Sleeps the grim wave, while heaven's rack,
Dispersed and wild, 'twixt earth and sky
Hangs like a shatter'd canopy.
There 's not a cloud in that blue plain
But tells of storm to come or past:
Here, flying loosely as the mane
Of a young war-horse in the blast:
There, roll'd in masses dark and swelling,
As proud to be the thunder's dwelling!
While some already burst and riven,
Seem melting down the verge of heaven,—
As though the infant storm had rent
The mighty womb that gave him birth,
And having swept the firmament,
Was now in fierce career for earth.
On earth 't was yet all calm around,
A pulseless silence, dread, profound,
More awful than the tempest's sound.
The diver steer'd for Ormus' bowers,
And moor'd his skiff till calmer hours;
The sea-birds, with portentous screech,
Flew fast to land; upon the beach,
The pilot oft had paused, with glance
Turn'd upward to that wild expanse;
And all was boding, drear, and dark
As her own soul, when Hinda's bark
Went slowly from the Persian shore.

No music timed her parting oar,
Nor friends upon the lessening strand
Linger'd, to wave the unseen hand,
Or speak the farewell, heard no more;
But lone, unheeded, from the bay
The vessel takes its mournful way,
Like some ill-destined bark that steers
In silence through the Gate of Tears.
And where was stern Al Hassan then?
Could not that saintly scourge of men
From bloodshed and devotion spare
One minute for a farewell there?
No,— close within, in changeful fits
Of cursing and of prayer, he sits
In savage loneliness to brood
Upon the coming night of blood,—
With that keen second-scent of death,
By which the vulture snuffs his food
In the still warm and living breath!
While o'er the wave his weeping daughter
Is wafted from these scenes of slaughter,—
As a young bird of Babylon,
Let loose to tell of victory won,
Flies home, with wing, ah! not unstain'd
By the red hands that held her chain'd.

And does the long-left home she seeks
Light up no gladness on her cheeks?
The flowers she nursed,—the well-known groves,
Where oft in dreams her spirit roves;

Once more to see her dear gazelles
Come bounding with their silver bells;
Her birds' new plumage to behold,
And the gay gleaming fishes count,
She left, all filleted with gold,
Shooting around their jasper fount;
Her little garden mosque to see,
And once again, at evening hour,
To tell her ruby rosary
In her own sweet acacia bower: —
Can these delights, that wait her now,
Call up no sunshine on her brow?
No; — silent, from her train apart —
As if e'en now she felt at heart
The chill of her approaching doom, —
She sits, all lovely in her gloom
As a pale Angel of the Grave;
And o'er the wide tempestuous wave
Looks, with a shudder, to those towers
Where, in a few short awful hours,
Blood, blood, in streaming tides shall run,
Foul incense for to-morrow's sun!
'Where art thou, glorious stranger! thou,
So loved, so lost, where art thou now?
Foe — Gheber — infidel — whate'er
The unhallow'd name thou 'rt doom'd to bear,
Still glorious, — still to this fond heart
Dear as its blood, whate'er thou art!
Yes, — Alla, dreadful Alla! yes, —
If there be wrong, be crime in this,

Let the black waves that round us roll
Whelm me this instant, ere my soul,
Forgetting faith — home — father — all,
Before its earthly idol fall,
Nor worship e'en Thyself above him —
For, oh, so wildly do I love him,
Thy Paradise itself were dim
And joyless, if not shared with him!'

Her hands were clasp'd, her eyes upturn'd,
Dropping their tears like moonlight rain;
And though her lip, fond raver! burn'd
With words of passion, bold, profane,
Yet was there light around her brow,—
A holiness in those dark eyes,
Which show'd, though wandering earthward now,
Her spirit's home was in the skies.
Yes; for a spirit pure as hers
Is always pure, e'en while it errs,—
As sunshine, broken in the rill,
Though turn'd astray, is sunshine still!

So wholly had her mind forgot
All thoughts but one, she heeded not
The rising storm — the wave that cast
A moment's midnight, as it pass'd;
Nor heard the frequent shout, the tread
Of gathering tumult o'er her head —
Clash'd swords, and tongues that seem'd to vie
With the rude riot of the sky.

But, hark! — that war-whoop on the deck!
That crash! as if each engine there,
Masts, sails, and all, were gone to wreck,
'Mid yells and stampings of despair!
Merciful Heaven! what can it be?
'Tis not the storm, though fearfully
The ship has shudder'd as she rode
O'er mountain-waves. — 'Forgive me, God!
Forgive me!' shriek'd the maid, and knelt,
Trembling all over, — for she felt
As if her judgment hour was near;
While crouching round, half-dead with fear,
Her handmaids clung, nor breathed, nor stirr'd—
When, hark! a second crash — a third —
And now, as if a bolt of thunder
Had riven the labouring planks asunder,
The deck falls in — what horrors then!
Blood, waves, and tackle, swords, and men,
Come mix'd together through the chasm,—
Some wretches in their dying spasm
Still fighting on, and some that call
'For God and Iran!' as they fall!

Whose was the hand that turn'd away
The perils of the infuriate fray,
And snatch'd her breathless from beneath
This wilderment of wreck and death?
She knew not,—for a faintness came
Chill o'er her, and her sinking frame
Amid the ruins of that hour

Lay, like a pale and scorched flower,
Beneath the red volcano's shower.
But, oh! the sights and sounds of dread
That shock'd her ere her senses fled!
The yawning deck,— the crowd that strove
Upon the tottering planks above,—
The sail whose fragments, shivering o'er
The strugglers' heads all dash'd with gore,
Flutter'd like bloody flags,— the clash
Of sabres, and the lightning's flash
Upon their blades, high toss'd about
Like meteor brands, as if throughout
The elements one fury ran,
One general rage, that left a doubt
Which was the fiercer, Heaven or Man!

Once too — but no, it could not be:
'T was fancy all,— yet once she thought
While yet her fading eyes could see,
High on the ruin'd deck she caught
A glimpse of that unearthly form,
That glory of her soul,— e'en then,
Amid the whirl of wreck and storm,
Shining above his fellow-men;
As, on some black and troublous night,
The Star of Egypt, whose proud light
Never hath beam'd on those who rest
In the White Islands of the West,
Burns through the storm with looks of flame
That put Heaven's cloudier eyes to shame.

But no, 't was but the minute's dream —
A fantasy,— and ere the scream
Had half-way pass'd her pallid lips,
A death-like swoon, a chill eclipse
Of soul and sense its darkness spread
Around her, and she sunk as dead.

How calm, how beautiful, comes on
The stilly hour, when storms are gone!
When warring winds have died away,
And clouds, beneath the glancing ray,
Melt off, and leave the land and sea
Sleeping in bright tranquillity,—
Fresh as if Day again were born,
Again upon the lap of Morn;
When the light blossoms, rudely torn
And scatter'd at the whirlwind's will,
Hang floating in the pure air still,
Filling it all with precious balm,
In gratitude for this sweet calm;
And every drop the thunder-showers
Have left upon the grass and flowers
Sparkles, as 't were that lightning-gem
Whose liquid flame is born of them!
When, 'stead of one unchanging breeze,
  There blow a thousand gentle airs,
  And each a different perfume bears,—
As if the loveliest plants and trees
Had vassal breezes of their own
To watch and wait on them alone,
  And waft no other breath than theirs;

When the blue waters rise and fall,
In sleepy sunshine mantling all;
And e'en that swell the tempest leaves
Is like the full and silent heaves
Of lovers' hearts, when newly blest,—
Too newly to be quite at rest.

Such was the golden hour that broke
Upon the world, when Hinda woke
From her long trance, and heard around
No motion but the water's sound
Rippling against the vessel's side,
As slow it mounted o'er the tide.—
But where is she? — her eyes are dark,
Are wilder'd still — is this the bark,
The same, that from Harmozia's bay
Bore her at morn,— whose bloody way
The sea-dog track'd? — no, strange and new
Is all that meets her wondering view.
Upon a galliot's deck she lies,
Beneath no rich pavilion's shade,—
No plumes to fan her sleeping eyes,
Nor jasmine on her pillow laid;
But the rude litter, roughly spread
With war-cloaks, is her homely bed,
And shawl and sash, on javelins hung,
For awning o'er her head are flung.
Shuddering, she look'd around: — there lay
A group of warriors in the sun,
Resting their limbs, as for that day
Their ministry of death were done;

Some gazing on the drowsy sea,
Lost in unconscious reverie;
And some who seem'd but ill to brook
That sluggish calm, with many a look
To the slack sail impatient cast,
As loose it flagg'd around the mast.

Blest Alla! who shall save her now?
There's not in all that warrior band
One Arab sword, one turban'd brow,
From her own Faithful Moslem land.
Their garb: the leathern belt that wraps
Each yellow vest,—that rebel hue,—
The Tartar fleece upon their caps,—
Yes, yes! her fears are all too true,
And Heaven hath, in this dreadful hour,
Abandon'd her to Hafed's power,—
Hafed, the Gheber!—at the thought
Her very heart's blood chills within,—
He, whom her soul was hourly taught
To loathe, as some foul fiend of sin,
Some minister whom Hell had sent
To spread its blast, where'er he went,
And fling, as o'er our earth he trod,
His shadow betwixt man and God!
And she is now his captive,—thrown
In his fierce hands, alive, alone;
His the infuriate band she sees,
All infidels—all enemies!
What was the daring hope that then

Cross'd her like lightning, as again,
With boldness that despair had lent,
She darted through that armed crowd
A look so searching, so intent,
That e'en the sternest warrior bow'd
Abash'd, when he her glances caught,
As if he guess'd whose form they sought?
But no,—she sees him not: 't is gone,
The vision that before her shone,
Through all the maze of blood and storm,
Is fled —'t was but a phantom form,—
One of those passing rainbow dreams,
Half light, half shade, which Fancy's beams
Paint on the fleeting mists that roll
In trance or slumber round the soul.

But now the bark, with livelier bound,
Scales the blue wave: the crew's in motion:
The oars are out, and with light sound
Break the bright mirror of the ocean,
Scattering its brilliant fragments round.
And now she sees — with horror sees —
Their course is toward that mountain-hold,
Those towers, that make her life-blood freeze,
Where Mecca's godless enemies
Lie, like beleaguer'd scorpions, roll'd
In their last deadly venomous fold!
Amid the illumined land and flood
Sunless that mighty mountain stood;
Save where, above its awful head,

There shone a flaming cloud, blood-red,
As 't were the flag of destiny
Hung out to mark where death would be!

Had her bewilder'd mind the power
Of thought in this terrific hour,
She well might marvel where or how
Man's foot could scale that mountain's brow,
Since ne'er had Arab heard or known
Of path but through the glen alone.—
But every thought was lost in fear,
When, as their bounding bark drew near
The craggy base, she felt the waves
Hurry them toward those dismal caves,
That from the Deep in windings pass
Beneath that Mount's volcanic mass;
And loud a voice on deck commands
To lower the masts and light the brands!
Instantly o'er the dashing tide
Within a cavern's mouth they glide,—
Gloomy as that eternal Porch
Through which departed spirits go:
Not e'en the flare of brand and torch
Its flickering light could further throw
Than the thick flood that boil'd below.
Silent they floated,— as if each
Sat breathless and too awed for speech
In that dark chasm, where even sound
Seem'd dark,— so sullenly around
The goblin echoes of the cave

Mutter'd it o'er the long black wave,
As 't were some secret of the grave!

But soft,— they pause,— the current turns
Beneath them from its onward track;
Some mighty unseen barrier spurns
The vexed tide, all foaming, back,
And scarce the oars' redoubled force
Can stem the eddy's whirling course;
When, hark! — some desperate foot has sprung
Among the rocks,— the chain is flung,—
The oars are up,— the grapple clings,
And the toss'd bark in moorings swings.
Just then, a day-beam through the shade
Broke tremulous; but ere the maid
Can see from whence the brightness steals,
Upon her brow she shuddering feels
A viewless hand, that promptly ties
A bandage round her burning eyes;
While the rude litter where she lies,
Uplifted by the warrior throng,
O'er the steep rocks is borne along.

Blest power of sunshine! genial Day,
What balm, what life is in thy ray!
To feel thee is such real bliss,
That had the world no joy but this,
To sit in sunshine calm and sweet,
It were a world too exquisite
For man to leave it for the gloom,

The deep, cold shadow of the tomb.
E'en Hinda, though she saw not where
Or whither wound the perilous road,
Yet knew by that awakening air
Which suddenly around her glow'd,
That they had risen from darkness then,
And breathed the sunny world again!

But soon this balmy freshness fled;
For now the sleepy labyrinth led
Through damp and gloom, 'mid crash of boughs,
And fall of loosen'd crags that rouse
The leopard from his hungry sleep,—
Who, starting, thinks each crag a prey,
And long is heard, from steep to steep,
Chasing them down their thundering way!
The jackal's cry,—the distant moan
Of the hyæna, fierce and lone,—
And that eternal saddening sound
Of torrents in the glen beneath,
As 't were the ever-dark Profound
That rolls beneath the Bridge of Death!
All, all is fearful,—e'en to see,
To gaze on those terrific things
She now but blindly hears, would be
Relief to her imaginings;
Since never yet was shape so dread,
But Fancy, thus in darkness thrown
And by such sounds of horror fed,
Could frame more dreadful of her own.

But does she dream? has Fear again
Perplex'd the workings of her brain,
Or did a voice, all music, then
Come from the gloom? low whispering near —
'Tremble not, love, thy Gheber's here!'
She does not dream — all sense, all ear,
She drinks the words, 'Thy Gheber's here.'
'T was his own voice, — she could not err, —
Throughout the breathing world's extent
There was but one such voice for her,
So kind, so soft, so eloquent!
Oh, sooner shall the rose of May
Mistake her own sweet nightingale,
And to some meaner minstrel's lay
Open her bosom's glowing veil,
Than Love shall ever doubt a tone,
A breath of the beloved one!

Though blest, 'mid all her ills, to think
She has that one beloved near,
Whose smile, though met on ruin's brink,
Hath power to make e'en ruin dear, —
Yet soon this gleam of rapture, crost
By fears for him, is chill'd and lost.
How shall the ruthless Hafed brook
That one of Gheber blood should look,
With aught but curses in his eye,
On her, a maid of Araby, —
A Moslem maid, — the child of him
Whose bloody banner's dire success

Hath left their altars cold and dim,
And their fair land a wilderness!
And, worse than all, that night of blood
Which comes so fast — oh, who shall stay
The sword, that once hath tasted food
Of Persian hearts, or turn its way?
What arm shall then the victim cover,
Or from her father shield her lover?

'Save him, my God!' she inly cries,—
'Save him this night! and if thine eyes
Have ever welcomed with delight
The sinner's tears, the sacrifice
Of sinners' hearts, guard him this night!
And here, before Thy throne, I swear
From my heart's inmost core to tear
Love, hope, remembrance, though they be
Link'd with each quivering life-string there,
And give it bleeding all to Thee!
Let him but live,—the burning tear,
The sighs, so sinful, yet so dear,
Which have been all too much his own,
Shall from this hour be Heaven's alone:
Youth pass'd in penitence, and age
In long and painful pilgrimage,
Shall leave no traces of the flame
That wastes me now,— nor shall his name
E'er bless my lips, but when I pray
For his dear spirit, that away
Casting from its angelic ray

The eclipse of earth, he, too, may shine
Redeem'd, all glorious and all Thine!
Think — think what victory to win
One radiant soul like his from sin,—
One wandering star of virtue back
To its own native, heavenward track!
Let him but live, and both are Thine,
Together Thine — for, blest or crost,
Living or dead, his doom is mine,
And, if he perish, both are lost!'

THE next evening, Lalla Rookh was entreated by her Ladies to continue the relation of her wonderful dream; but the fearful interest that hung round the fate of Hinda and her lover had completely removed every trace of it from her mind,—much to the disappointment of a fair seer or two in her train, who prided themselves on their skill in interpreting visions, and who had already remarked, as an unlucky omen, that the Princess, on the very morning after the dream, had worn a silk dyed with the blossoms of the sorrowful tree, Nilica.

Fadladeen, whose indignation had more than once broken out during the recital of some parts of this heterodox poem, seemed at length to have made up his mind to the infliction; and took his seat this evening with all the patience of a martyr, while the Poet resumed his profane and seditious story as follows:—

To tearless eyes and hearts at ease,
The leafy shores and sun-bright seas,
That lay beneath that mountain's height,
Had been a fair enchanting sight.
'T was one of those ambrosial eves
A day of storm so often leaves
At its calm setting,—when the West
Opens her golden bowers of rest,
And a moist radiance from the skies
Shoots trembling down, as from the eyes
Of some meek penitent, whose last
Bright hours atone for dark ones past,
And whose sweet tears, o'er wrong forgiven,
Shine, as they fall, with light from Heaven!

'T was stillness all: the winds that late
Had rush'd through Kerman's almond groves,
And shaken from her bowers of date
That cooling feast the traveller loves,
Now, lull'd to languor, scarcely curl
The Green Sea wave, whose waters gleam
Limpid, as if her mines of pearl
Were melted all to form the stream;
And her fair islets, small and bright,
With their green shores reflected there,
Look like those Peri isles of light
That hang by spell-work in the air.

But vainly did those glories burst
On Hinda's dazzled eyes when first
The bandage from her brow was taken,
And, pale and awed as those who waken
In their dark tombs, when, scowling near,
The Searchers of the Grave appear,—
She shuddering turn'd to read her fate
In the fierce eyes that flash'd around;
And saw those towers all desolate,
That o'er her head terrific frown'd,
As if defying e'en the smile
Of that soft heaven to gild their pile.
In vain, with mingled hope and fear,
She looks for him, whose voice so dear
Had come, like music, to her ear:—
Strange, mocking dream! again 'tis fled.
And oh, the shoots, the pangs of dread
That through her inmost bosom run,
When voices from without proclaim—
'Hafed, the Chief!'—and one by one
The warriors shout that fearful name!
He comes! the rock resounds his tread!—
How shall she dare to lift her head,
Or meet those eyes whose scorching glare
Not Yemen's boldest sons can bear?
In whose red beam, the Moslem tells,
Such rank and deadly lustre dwells,
As in those hellish fires that light
The mandrake's charnel leaves at night.
How shall she bear that voice's tone?

At whose loud battle-cry alone
Whole squadrons oft in panic ran,
Scatter'd like some vast caravan,
When, stretch'd at evening round the well,
They hear the thirsting tiger's yell!
Breathless she stands, with eyes cast down,
Shrinking beneath the fiery frown
Which, fancy tells her, from that brow
Is flashing o'er her fiercely now;
And shuddering as she hears the tread
Of his retiring warrior band:
Never was pause so full of dread,—
Till Hafed with a trembling hand
Took hers, and, leaning o'er her, said —
'Hinda': — that word was all he spoke,
And 't was enough — the shriek that broke
From her full bosom told the rest.
Panting with terror, joy, surprise,
The maid but lifts her wondering eyes,
To hide them on her Gheber's breast!
'T is he, 't is he! — the man of blood,
The fellest of the Fire-fiend's brood,
Hafed, the demon of the fight,
Whose voice unnerves, whose glances blight, —
Is her own loved Gheber, mild
And glorious as when first he smiled
In her lone tower, and left such beams
Of his pure eye to light her dreams,
That she believed her bower had given
Rest to some wanderer from Heaven.

Moments there are, and this was one,
Snatch'd like a minute's gleam of sun
Amid the black Simoom's eclipse,—
Or like those verdant spots that bloom
Around the crater's burning lips,
Sweetening the very edge of doom!
The past, — the future, — all that Fate
Can bring of dark or desperate
Around such hours, but makes them cast
Intenser radiance while they last!

Even he, this youth — though dimm'd and gone
Each star of Hope that cheer'd him on:
His glories lost, his cause betray'd;
Iran, his dear-loved country, made
A land of carcasses and slaves,
One dreary waste of chains and graves!
Himself but lingering, dead at heart,
To see the last long struggling breath
Of Liberty's great soul depart,
Then lay him down and share her death: —
Even he, so sunk in wretchedness,
With doom still darker gathering o'er him,
Yet, in this moment's pure caress,
In the mild eyes that shown before him,
Beaming that blest assurance, worth
All other transports known on earth, —
That he was loved — well, warmly loved, —
Oh! in this precious hour he proved
How deep, how thorough-felt, the glow

Of rapture, kindling out of woe;
How exquisite one single drop
Of bliss, thus sparkling to the top
Of misery's cup, — how keenly quaff'd,
Though death must follow on the draught!

She, too, while gazing on those eyes
That sink into her soul so deep,
Forgets all fears, all miseries, —
Or feels them like the wretch in sleep,
Whom Fancy cheats into a smile,
Who dreams of joy, and sobs the while!
The mighty Ruins where they stood,
Upon the mount's high rocky verge,
Lay open towards the ocean flood,
Where lightly o'er the illumined surge
Many a fair bark that all the day
Had lurk'd in sheltering creek or bay,
Now bounded on, and gave their sails,
Yet dripping, to the evening gales, —
Like eagles, when the storm is done,
Spreading their wet wings in the sun.
The beauteous clouds, though daylight's Star
Had sunk behind the hills of Lar,
Were still with lingering glories bright, —
As if, to grace the gorgeous West,
The Spirit of departing Light
That eve had left his sunny vest
Behind him, ere he wing'd his flight.
Never was scene so form'd for love, —

Beneath them waves of crystal move
In silent swell,— Heaven glows above,
And their pure hearts, to transport given,
Swell like the wave, and glow like Heaven.

But, ah! too soon that dream is past!
Again, again her fear returns: —
Night, dreadful night, is gathering fast,
More faintly the horizon burns,
And every rosy tint that lay
On the smooth sea hath died away.
Hastily to the darkening skies
A glance she casts, — then wildly cries:
'At night, he said,— and look, 't is near! —
Fly, fly! — if yet thou lov'st me, fly! —
Soon will his murderous band be here,
And I shall see thee bleed and die.—
Hush! heard'st thou not the tramp of men
Sounding from yonder fearful glen?
Perhaps e'en now they climb the wood —
Fly, fly! — though still the West is bright,
He'll come — oh, yes! he wants thy blood! —
I know him — he'll not wait for night!'

In terrors e'en to agony
She clings around the wondering Chief:
'Alas, poor wilder'd maid! to me
Thou owest this raving trance of grief:
Lost as I am, nought ever grew
Beneath my shade but perish'd too,—

My doom is like the Dead Sea air,
And nothing lives that enters there!
Why were our barks together driven
Beneath this morning's furious heaven?
Why, when I saw the prize that chance
Had thrown into my desperate arms,
When, casting but a single glance
Upon thy pale and prostrate charms,
I vow'd (though watching viewless o'er
Thy safety through that hour's alarms)
To meet the unmanning sight no more, —
Why have I broke that heart-wrung vow?
Why weakly, madly, met thee now? —
Start not, — that noise is but the shock
Of torrents through yon valley hurl'd;
Dread nothing here, — upon this rock
We stand above the jarring world,
Alike beyond its hope — its dread —
In gloomy safety, like the Dead!
Or, could e'en Earth and Hell unite
In league to storm this Sacred Height,
Fear nothing thou: myself, to-night,
And each o'erlooking star that dwells
Near God, will be thy sentinels; —
And ere to-morrow's dawn shall glow,
Back to thy sire'——
'To-morrow! — no!'
The maiden scream'd, — 'thou'lt never see
To-morrow's sun! death, death will be
The night cry through each reeking tower,

Unless we fly, ay, fly this hour!
Thou art betray'd: some wretch who knew
That dreadful glen's mysterious clew —
Nay, doubt not, by yon stars, 't is true! —
Hath sold thee to my vengeful sire;
This morning, with that smile so dire
He wears in joy, he told me all,
And stamp'd in triumph through our hall,
As though thy heart already beat
Its last life-throb beneath his feet!
Good Heaven! how little dream'd I then
His victim was mine own loved youth! —
Fly — send — let some one watch the glen, —
By all my hopes of Heaven, 't is truth!'

Oh, colder than the wind that freezes
Founts that but now in sunshine play'd,
Is that congealing pang which seizes
The trusting bosom, when betray'd.
He felt it — deeply felt — and stood,
As if the tale had frozen his blood,
So mazed and motionless was he, —
Like one whom sudden spells enchant,
Or some mute marble habitant
Of the still Halls of Ishmonie!

But soon the painful chill was o'er,
And his great soul, herself once more,
Look'd from his brow in all the rays
Of her best, happiest, grandest days.

Never in moment most elate
Did that high spirit loftier rise;
While bright, serene, determinate,
His looks are lifted to the skies,
As if the signal lights of Fate
Were shining in those awful eyes!
'T is come,—his hour of martyrdom
In Iran's sacred cause is come;
And, though his life hath pass'd away
Like lightning on a stormy day,
Yet shall his death-hour leave a track
Of glory, permanent and bright,
To which the brave of after-times,
The suffering brave, shall long look back
With proud regret,—and by its light
Watch through the hours of Slavery's night
For vengeance on the Oppressor's crimes.
This rock, his monument aloft,
Shall speak the tale to many an age;
And hither bards and heroes oft
Shall come in secret pilgrimage,
And bring their warrior sons, and tell
The wondering boys where Hafed fell,
And swear them on those lone remains
Of their lost country's ancient fanes,—
Never, while breath of life shall live
Within them, never to forgive
The accursed race, whose ruthless chain
Hath left on Iran's neck a stain
Blood, blood alone can cleanse again!

Such are the swelling thoughts that now
Enthrone themselves on Hafed's brow;
And ne'er did saint of Issa gaze
On the red wreath, for martyrs twined,
More proudly than the youth surveys
That pile, which through the gloom behind,
Half lighted by the altar's fire,
Glimmers — his destined funeral pyre!
Heap'd by his own, his comrades' hands,
Of every wood of odourous breath,
There, by the Fire-God's shrine it stands,
Ready to fold in radiant death
The few still left of those who swore
To perish there, when hope was o'er,—
The few, to whom that couch of flame,
Which rescues them from bonds and shame,
Is sweet and welcome as the bed
For their own infant Prophet spread,
When pitying Heaven to roses turn'd
The death-flames that beneath him burn'd!

With watchfulness the maid attends
His rapid glance, where'er it bends,—
Why shoot his eyes such awful beams?
What plans he now? what thinks or dreams?
Alas! why stands he musing here,
When every moment teems with fear?
'Hafed, mine own beloved Lord,'
She kneeling cries, 'first, last, adored!
If in that soul thou'st ever felt

Half what thy lips impassion'd swore,
Here, on my knees, that never knelt
To any but their God before,
I pray thee, as thou lov'st me, fly! —
Now, now! — ere yet their blades are nigh.
Oh, haste! — the bark that bore me hither
Can waft us o'er yon darkening sea
East,— west,— alas, I care not whither,
So thou art safe, and I with thee!
Go where we will, this hand in thine,
Those eyes before me smiling thus,
Through good and ill, through storm and shine,
The world's a world of love for us!
On some calm blessed shore we'll dwell,
Where 't is no crime to love too well;
Where thus to worship tenderly
An erring child of light like thee
Will not be sin,— or, if it be,
Where we may weep our faults away,
Together kneeling, night and day,
Thou, for my sake, at Alla's shrine,
And I — at any God's for thine!'

Wildly these passionate words she spoke,—
Then hung her head, and wept for shame;
Sobbing as if a heart-string broke
With every deep-heaved sob that came.
While he, young, warm,— oh, wonder not
If, for a moment, pride and fame,
His oath, his cause, that shrine of flame,

And Iran's self, are all forgot
For her whom at his feet he sees
Kneeling in speechless agonies.
No, blame him not, if Hope awhile
Dawn'd in his soul, and threw her smile
O'er hours to come,— o'er days and nights,
Wing'd with those precious pure delights
Which she, who bends all beauteous there,
Was born to kindle and to share.
A tear or two, which, as he bow'd
To raise the suppliant, trembling stole,
First warn'd him of this dangerous cloud
Of softness passing o'er his soul.
Starting, he brush'd the drops away,
Unworthy o'er that cheek to stray,—
Like one who, on the morn of fight,
Shakes from his sword the dews of night,
That had but dimm'd, not stain'd, its light.
Yet, though subdued the unnerving thrill,
Its warmth, its weakness linger'd still,
So touching in each look and tone
That the fond, fearing, hoping maid
Half counted on the flight she pray'd,
Half thought the hero's soul was grown
As soft, as yielding as her own,
And smiled and bless'd him, while he said:
'Yes, if there be some happier sphere,
Where fadeless truth like ours is dear,—
If there be any land of rest
For those who love and ne'er forget,—

Oh, comfort thee; for, safe and blest,
We'll meet in that calm region yet!'

Scarce had she time to ask her heart
If good or ill these words impart,
When the roused youth impatient flew
To the tower-wall, where, high in view,
A ponderous sea-horn hung, and blew
A signal, deep and dread as those
The storm-fiend at his rising blows.
Full well his Chieftains, sworn and true
Through life and death, that signal knew;
For 't was the appointed warning-blast,
The alarm to tell when hope was past,
And the tremendous death-die cast!
And there, upon the mouldering tower,
Hath hung this sea-horn many an hour,
Ready to sound o'er land and sea
That dirge-note of the brave and free.
They came — his Chieftains at the call
Came slowly round, and with them all —
Alas, how few! — the worn remains
Of those who late o'er Kerman's plains
Went gayly prancing to the clash
Of Moorish zel and tymbalon,
Catching new hope from every flash
Of their long lances in the sun,
And, as their coursers charged the wind,
And the white ox-tails stream'd behind,
Looking as if the steeds they rode

Were wing'd, and every Chief a God!
How fallen, how alter'd now! how wan
Each scarr'd and faded visage shone,
As round the burning shrine they came!
How deadly was the glare it cast,
As mute they paused before the flame
To light their torches as they pass'd!
'T was silence all — the youth had plann'd
The duties of his soldier-band;
And each determined brow declares
His faithful Chieftains well know theirs.

But minutes speed — night gems the skies —
And oh, how soon, ye blessed eyes
That look from heaven, ye may behold
Sights that will turn your star-fires cold!
Breathless with awe, impatience, hope,
The maiden sees the veteran group
Her litter silently prepare,
And lay it at her trembling feet;
And now the youth, with gentle care,
Hath placed her in the shelter'd seat,
And press'd her hand — that lingering press
Of hands, that for the last time sever;
Of hearts, whose pulse of happiness,
When that hold breaks, is dead forever.
And yet to her this sad caress
Gives hope — so fondly hope can err!
'T was joy, she thought, joy's mute excess —
Their happy flight's dear harbinger;

'T was warmth — assurance — tenderness,—
'T was anything but leaving her.

'Haste, haste!' she cried, 'the clouds grow dark,
But still, ere night, we'll reach the bark;
And by to-morrow's dawn — oh, bliss! —
With thee upon the sun-bright deep,
Far off, I'll but remember this,
As some dark vanish'd dream of sleep;
And thou'——But ah! — he answers not:
Good Heaven! — and does she go alone?
She now has reach'd that dismal spot,
Where, some hours since, his voice's tone
Had come to soothe her fears and ills,
Sweet as the angel Israfil's,
When every leaf on Eden's tree
Is trembling to his minstrelsy,—
Yet now — oh, now, he is not nigh.
'Hafed! my Hafed! — if it be
Thy will, thy doom this night to die,
Let me but stay to die with thee,
And I will bless thy loved name,
Till the last life-breath leave this frame.
Oh, let our lips, our cheeks, be laid
But near each other while they fade;
Let us but mix our parting breaths,
And I can die ten thousand deaths!
You too, who hurry me away
So cruelly, one moment stay —
Oh, stay — one moment is not much —

He yet may come — for him I pray —
Hafed! dear Hafed!'— All the way
In wild lamentings, that would touch
A heart of stone, she shriek'd his name
To the dark woods — no Hafed came:
No, hapless pair, you've look'd your last;
Your hearts should both have broken then:
The dream is o'er — your doom is cast —
You'll never meet on earth again!

Alas for him, who hears her cries!
Still half-way down the steep he stands,
Watching with fix'd and feverish eyes
The glimmer of those burning brands,
That down the rocks, with mournful ray,
Light all he loves on earth away!
Hopeless as they who, far at sea,
By the cold moon have just consign'd
The corse of one, loved tenderly,
To the bleak flood they leave behind;
And on the deck still lingering stay,
And long look back, with sad delay,
To watch the moonlight on the wave
That ripples o'er that cheerless grave.

But see — he starts! — what heard he then?
That dreadful shout! — across the glen
From the land-side it comes, and loud
Rings through the chasm; as if the crowd
Of fearful things, that haunt that dell,

Its Gholes and Dives and shapes of Hell,
Had all in one dread howl broke out,—
So loud, so terrible that shout!
'They come — the Moslems come!' he cries,
His proud soul mounting to his eyes;
'Now, Spirits of the Brave, who roam
Enfranchised through yon starry dome,
Rejoice — for souls of kindred fire
Are on the wing to join your choir!'
He said — and, light as bridegrooms bound
To their young loves, reclimb'd the steep
And gain'd the Shrine; his Chiefs stood round—
Their swords, as with instinctive leap,
Together, at that cry accurst,
Had from their sheaths, like sunbeams, burst.
And hark! — again — again it rings;
Near and more near its echoings
Peal through the chasm — oh, who that then
Had seen those listening warrior-men,
With their swords grasp'd, their eyes of flame
Turn'd on their Chief — could doubt the shame,
The indignant shame with which they thrill
To hear those shouts and yet stand still?

He read their thoughts — they were his own:
'What! while our arms can wield these blades,
Shall we die tamely? — die alone,
Without one victim to our shades,
One Moslem heart, where, buried deep,
The sabre from its toil may sleep?

No — God of Iran's burning skies,
Thou scorn'st the inglorious sacrifice!
No — though of all earth's hope bereft,
Life, swords, and vengeance still are left!
We 'll make yon valley's reeking caves
  Live in the awe-struck minds of men,
Till tyrants shudder, when their slaves
  Tell of the Gheber's bloody glen.
Follow, brave hearts! — this pile remains
Our refuge still from life and chains;
But his the best, the holiest bed,
Who sinks entomb'd in Moslem dead!'

Down the precipitous rocks they sprung,
While vigor, more than human, strung
Each arm and heart.— The exulting foe
Still through the dark defiles below,
Track'd by his torches' lurid fire,
  Wound slow, as through Golconda's vale
The mighty serpent, in his ire,
  Glides on with glittering, deadly trail.
No torch the Ghebers need — so well
They know each mystery of the dell,
So oft have, in their wanderings,
Cross'd the wild race that round them dwell,
  The very tigers from their delves
Look out, and let them pass, as things
  Untamed and fearless like themselves!

There was a deep ravine, that lay

Yet darkling in the Moslem's way;
Fit spot to make invaders rue
The many fallen before the few.
The torrents from that morning's sky
Had fill'd the narrow chasm breast high,
And, on each side, aloft and wild,
Huge cliffs and toppling crags were piled,—
The guards with which young Freedom lines
The pathways to her mountain-shrines.
Here, at this pass, the scanty band
Of Iran's last avengers stand;
Here wait, in silence like the dead,
And listen for the Moslem's tread
So anxiously, the carrion-bird
Above them flaps his wing unheard!

They come — that plunge into the water
Gives signal for the work of slaughter!
Now, Ghebers, now — if e'er your blades
Had point or prowess, prove them now!
Woe to the file that foremost wades!
They come — a falchion greets each brow,
And, as they tumble, trunk on trunk,
Beneath the gory waters sunk,
Still o'er their drowning bodies press
New victims quick and numberless;
Till scarce an arm in Hafed's band,
So fierce their toil, hath power to stir,
But listless from each crimson hand
The sword hangs, clogg'd with massacre.

Never was horde of tyrants met
With bloodier welcome — never yet
To patriot vengeance hath the sword
More terrible libations pour'd.

All up the dreary long ravine,
By the red murky glimmer seen
Of half-quench'd brands that o'er the flood
Lie scatter'd round and burn in blood,
What ruin glares! what carnage swims!
Heads, blazing turbans, quivering limbs,
Lost swords that, dropp'd from many a hand,
In that thick pool of slaughter stand,—
Wretches who wading, half on fire
From the toss'd brands that round them fly,
'Twixt flood and flame in shrieks expire;
And some who, grasp'd by those that die,
Sink woundless with them, smother'd o'er
In their dead brethren's gushing gore!

But vainly hundreds, thousands bleed,—
Still hundreds, thousands more succeed;
Countless as toward some flame at night
The North's dark insects wing their flight,
And quench or perish in its light,
To this terrific spot they pour —
Till, bridged with Moslem bodies o'er,
It bears aloft their slippery tread,
And o'er the dying and the dead,—
Tremendous causeway! — on they pass.

Then, hapless Ghebers, then, alas!
What hope was left for you? — for you,
Whose yet warm pile of sacrifice
Is smoking in their vengeful eyes!
Whose swords how keen, how fierce they knew,
And burn with shame to find how few!

Crush'd down by that vast multitude,
Some found their graves where first they stood;
While some with hardier struggle died,
And still fought on by Hafed's side,
Who, fronting to the foe, trod back
Toward the high towers his gory track;
And, as a lion swept away
By sudden swell of Jordan's pride
From the wild covert where he lay,
Long battles with the o'erwhelming tide,
So fought he back with fierce delay,
And kept both foes and fate at bay.

But whither now? — their track is lost,
Their prey escaped — guide, torches gone;
By torrent-beds and labyrinths crost,
The scatter'd crowd rush blindly on:
'Curse on those tardy lights that wind,'
They panting cry, 'so far behind!
Oh, for a bloodhound's precious scent,
To track the way the Gheber went!'
Vain wish — confusedly along
They rush, more desperate as more wrong:

Till, wilder'd by the far-off lights
Yet glittering up those gloomy heights,
Their footing, mazed and lost, they miss,
And down the darkling precipice
Are dash'd into the deep abyss;
Or midway hang, impaled on rocks,
A banquet, yet alive, for flocks
Of ravening vultures,— while the dell
Re-echoes with each horrible yell.

Those sounds — the last, to vengeance dear,
That e'er shall ring in Hafed's ear,—
Now reach'd him, as aloft, alone,
Upon the steep way breathless thrown,
He lay beside his reeking blade,
Resign'd, as if life's task were o'er,
Its last blood-offering amply paid,
And Iran's self could claim no more.
One only thought, one lingering beam,
Now broke across his dizzy dream
Of pain and weariness: 't was she,
His heart's pure planet, shining yet
Above the waste of memory,
When all life's other lights were set.
And never to his mind before
Her image such enchantment wore.
It seem'd as if each thought that stain'd,
Each fear that chill'd their loves, was past;
And not one cloud of earth remain'd
Between him and her radiance cast; —

As if to charms, before so bright,
New grace from other worlds was given,
And his soul saw her by the light
Now breaking o'er itself from heaven!

A voice spoke near him — 't was the tone
Of a loved friend, the only one,
Of all his warriors, left with life
From that short night's tremendous strife.
'And must we then, my Chief, die here?
Foes round us, and the Shrine so near!'
These words have roused the last remains
Of life within him. 'What! not yet
Beyond the reach of Moslem chains!'
The thought could make e'en Death forget
His icy bondage; with a bound
He springs, all bleeding, from the ground,
And grasps his comrade's arm, now grown
E'en feebler, heavier than his own,
And up the painful pathway leads,
Death gaining on each step he treads.
Speed them, thou God who heard'st their vow!
They mount — they bleed; oh, save them now!
The crags are red they 've clamber'd o'er,
The rock-weed's dripping with their gore;
Thy blade too, Hafed, false at length,
Now breaks beneath thy tottering strength!
Haste, haste! — the voices of the Foe
Come near and nearer from below;
One effort more — thank Heaven! 't is past;

They 've gain'd the topmost steep at last.
And now they touch the temple's walls,
Now Hafed sees the Fire divine,—
When, lo! — his weak, worn comrade falls
Dead on the threshold of the Shrine.
'Alas, brave soul, too quickly fled!
And must I leave thee withering here,
The sport of every ruffian's tread,
The mark for every coward's spear?
No, by yon altar's sacred beams!'
He cries, and, with a strength that seems
Not of this world, uplifts the frame
Of the fallen Chief, and toward the flame
Bears him along; — with death-damp hand
The corpse upon the pyre he lays,
Then lights the consecrated brand,
And fires the pile, whose sudden blaze
Like lightning bursts o'er Oman's Sea.
'Now, Freedom's God! I come to Thee,'
The youth exclaims; and with a smile
Of triumph vaulting on the pile
In that last effort, ere the fires
Have harm'd one glorious limb, expires!

What shriek was that on Oman's tide?
It came from yonder drifting bark,
That just hath caught upon her side
The death-light — and again is dark.
It is the boat — ah, why delayed? —
That bears the wretched Moslem maid;

Confided to the watchful care
Of a small veteran band, with whom
Their generous Chieftain would not share
The secret of his final doom,
But hoped when Hinda, safe and free,
Was render'd to her father's eyes,
Their pardon, full and prompt, would be
The ransom of so dear a prize.
Unconscious, thus, of Hafed's fate,
And proud to guard their beauteous freight,
Scarce had they clear'd the surfy waves
That foam around those frightful caves,
When the curst war-whoops, known so well,
Came echoing from the distant dell;
Sudden each oar, upheld and still,
Hung dripping o'er the vessel's side,
And, driving at the current's will,
They rock'd along the whispering tide;
While every eye, in mute dismay,
Was toward that fatal mountain turn'd,
Where the dim altar's quivering ray
As yet all lone and tranquil burn'd.

Oh, 't is not, Hinda, in the power
Of Fancy's most terrific touch
To paint thy pangs in that dread hour —
Thy silent agony! 't was such
As those who feel could paint too well,
But none e'er felt and lived to tell!
'T was not alone the dreary state

Of a lorn spirit crush'd by fate,
When, though no more remains to dread,
The panic chill will not depart;
When, though the inmate Hope be dead,
Her ghost still haunts the mouldering heart.
No — pleasures, hopes, affections, gone,
The wretch may bear, and yet live on,
Like things within the cold rock found
Alive, when all 's congeal'd around.
But there's a blank repose in this,
A calm stagnation, that were bliss
To the keen, burning, harrowing pain,
Now felt through all thy breast and brain; —
That spasm of terror, mute, intense,
That breathless, agonized suspense,
From whose hot throb, whose deadly aching,
The heart hath no relief but breaking!

Calm is the wave — heaven's brilliant lights
Reflected dance beneath the prow;
Time was when, on such lovely nights,
She who is there, so desolate now,
Could sit all cheerful, though alone,
And ask no happier joy than seeing
That starlight o'er the waters thrown —
No joy but that, to make her blest,
And the fresh, buoyant sense of being,
Which bounds in youth's yet careless breast,—
Itself a star, not borrowing light,
But in its own glad essence bright.

How different now! — But hark! again
The yell of havoc rings! — brave men,
In vain, with beating hearts, ye stand
On the bark's edge — in vain each hand
Half draws the falchion from its sheath;
All 's o'er — in rust your blades may lie:
He, at whose word they 've scatter'd death,
E'en now, this night, himself must die!
Well may ye look to yon dim tower,
And ask, and wondering guess, what means
The battle-cry at this dead hour!
Ah, she could tell you — she who leans
Unheeded there, pale, sunk, aghast,
With brow against the dew-cold mast;
Too well she knows — her more than life,
Her soul's first idol and its last,
Lies bleeding in that murderous strife.

But see! what moves upon the height?
Some signal! — 't is a torch's light:
What bodes its solitary glare?
In gasping silence toward the Shrine
All eyes are turn'd — thine, Hinda, thine
Fix their last fading life-beams there.
'T was but a moment: fierce and high
The death-pile blazed into the sky,
And far away, o'er rock and flood,
Its melancholy radiance sent;
While Hafed, like a vision, stood
Reveal'd before the burning pyre,

Tall, shadowy, like a Spirit of Fire
Shrined in its own grand element!
'"T is he!' the shuddering maid exclaims,—
But, while she speaks, he's seen no more;
High burst in air the funeral flames,
And Iran's hopes and hers are o'er!
One wild heart-broken shriek she gave,—
Then sprung, as if to reach that blaze,
Where still she fix'd her dying gaze,
And, gazing, sunk into the wave,—
Deep, deep,— where never care or pain
Shall reach her innocent heart again!

Farewell — farewell to thee, Araby's daughter!
(Thus warbled a Peri beneath the dark sea,)
No pearl ever lay, under Oman's green water,
More pure in its shell than thy spirit in thee.

Oh, fair as the sea-flower close to thee growing,
How light was thy heart till Love's witchery came,
Like the wind of the south o'er a summer lute blowing,
And hush'd all its music, and wither'd its frame!

But long, upon Araby's green sunny highlands,
Shall maids and their lovers remember the doom
Of her who lies sleeping among the Pearl Islands,
With nought but the sea-star to light up her tomb.

And still, when the merry date-season is burning,
And calls to the palm-groves the young and the old,
The happiest there, from their pastime returning
At sunset, will weep when thy story is told.

The young village-maid, when with flowers she dresses
Her dark flowing hair for some festival day,
Will think of thy fate, till, neglecting her tresses,
She mournfully turns from the mirror away.

Nor shall Iran, beloved of her Hero, forget thee,
Though tyrants watch over her tears as they start;
Close, close by the side of that Hero she 'll set thee,
Embalm'd in the innermost shrine of her heart.

Farewell — be it ours to embellish thy pillow
With everything beauteous that grows in the deep;
Each flower of the rock and each gem of the billow
Shall sweeten thy bed and illumine thy sleep.

Around thee shall glisten the loveliest amber
That ever the sorrowing sea-bird has wept;
With many a shell, in whose hollow-wreathed chamber,
We, Peris of Ocean, by moonlight have slept.

We 'll dive where the gardens of coral lie darkling,
And plant all the rosiest stems at thy head;
We 'll seek where the sands of the Caspian are sparkling,
And gather their gold to strew over thy bed.

Farewell — farewell! until Pity's sweet fountain
Is lost in the hearts of the fair and the brave,
They 'll weep for the Chieftain who died on that mountain,
They 'll weep for the Maiden who sleeps in this wave.

THE singular placidity with which Fadladeen had listened, during the latter part of this obnoxious story, surprised the Princess and Feramorz exceedingly; and even inclined towards him the hearts of these unsuspicious young persons, who little knew the source of a complacency so marvellous. The truth was, he had been organizing, for the last few days, a most notable plan of persecution against the Poet, in consequence of some passages that had fallen from him on the second evening of recital, —which appeared to this worthy Chamberlain to contain language and principles for which nothing short of the summary criticism of the Chabuk would be advisable. It was his intention, therefore, immediately on their arrival at Cashmere, to give information to the King of Bucharia of the very dangerous sentiments of his minstrel; and if, unfortunately, that monarch did not act with suitable vigour on the occasion, (that is, if he did not give the Chabuk to Feramorz, and a place to Fadladeen), there would be an end, he feared, of all legitimate government in Bucharia. He could not help, however, auguring better both for himself and the cause of potentates in general; and it was the pleasure arising from these mingled anticipations that diffused such unusual satisfaction through his features, and made his eyes shine out, like poppies of the desert, over the wide and lifeless wilderness of that countenance.

Having decided upon the Poet's chastisement in this manner, he thought it but humanity to spare him the minor tortures of criticism. Accordingly, when they assembled the following evening in the pavilion, and Lalla Rookh was expecting to see all the beauties of her bard melt away, one by one, in the acidity of criticism, like pearls in the cup of the Egyptian queen,— he agreeably disappointed her, by merely saying, with an ironical smile, that the merits of such a poem deserved to be tried at a much higher tribunal; and then suddenly passed off into a panegyric upon all Mussulman sovereigns, more particularly his august and Imperial master, Aurungzebe,— the wisest and best of the descendants of Timur,— who, among other great things he had done for mankind, had given to him, Fadladeen, the very profitable posts of Betel-carrier and Taster of Sherbets to the Emperor, Chief Holder of the Girdle of Beautiful Forms, and Grand Nazir, or Chamberlain of the Haram.

They were now not far from that Forbidden River, beyond which no pure Hindoo can pass; and were reposing for a time in the rich valley of Hussun Abdaul, which had always been a favourite resting-place of the Emperors in their annual migrations to Cashmere. Here often had the Light of the Faith, Jehan-Guire, been known to wander with his beloved and beautiful Nourmahal; and here would Lalla Rookh have been happy to remain forever, giving up the throne of Bucharia and the world for Feramorz and love in this sweet, lonely valley. But the time was now fast approaching when she must see him no longer,— or, what was still worse, behold him with eyes whose every look belonged to another; and there was a melancholy preciousness in these last moments, which made her heart cling to them as it would to life. During the latter part of the journey, indeed, she had sunk into a deep sadness, from which nothing but the presence of the young minstrel could awake her. Like those lamps in tombs, which only light up when the air is admitted, it was only at his approach that her eyes became smiling and animated. But here, in this dear valley, every moment appeared an age of pleasure; she saw him all day, and was, therefore, all day happy,— resembling, she often thought, that people of Zinge, who attribute the unfading cheerfulness they enjoy to one genial star that rises nightly over their heads.

The whole party, indeed, seemed in their liveliest mood during the few days they passed in this delightful solitude. The young attendants of the Princess, who were here allowed a much freer range than they could safely be indulged with in a less sequestered place, ran wild among the gardens and bounded through the meadows, lightly as young roes over the aromatic plains of Tibet. While Fadladeen, in addition to the spiritual comfort derived by him from a pilgrimage to the tomb of the Saint from whom the valley is named, had also opportunities of indulging, in a small way, his taste for victims, by putting to death some hundreds of those unfortunate little lizards which all pious Mussulmans make it a point to kill; — taking for granted, that the manner in which the creature hangs its head is meant as a mimicry of the attitude in which the Faithful say their prayers.

About two miles from Hussun Abdaul were those Royal Gardens which had grown beautiful under the care of so many lovely eyes, and were beautiful still, though those eyes could see them no longer. This place, with its flowers and its holy silence, interrupted only by the dipping of the wings of birds in its marble basins filled with the pure water of those hills, was to Lalla Rookh all that her heart could fancy of fragrance, coolness, and almost heavenly tranquillity. As the Prophet said of Damascus, "It was too delicious"; and here, in listening to the sweet voice of Feramorz, or reading in his eyes what yet he never dared to tell her, the most exquisite moments of her whole life were passed. One evening, when they had been talking of the Sultana Nourmahal, the Light of the Haram, who had so often wandered among these flowers, and fed with her own hands, in those marble basins, the small shining fishes of which she was so fond,— the youth, in order to delay the moment of separation, proposed to recite a short story, or rather rhapsody, of which this adored Sultana was the heroine. It related, he said, to the reconcilement of a sort of lovers' quarrel which took place between her and the Emperor during a Feast of Roses at Cashmere; and would remind the Princess of that difference between Haroun-al-Raschid and his fair mistress Marida which was so happily made up by the soft strains of the musician Moussali. As the story was chiefly to be told in song, and Feramorz had unluckily forgotten his own lute in the valley, he borrowed the vina of Lalla Rookh's little Persian slave, and thus began: —

THE LIGHT OF THE HARAM.

Who has not heard of the vale of Cashmere,
With its roses the brightest that earth ever gave,
Its temples, and grottos, and fountains as clear
As the love-lighted eyes that hung over their wave?

Oh, to see it at sunset,—when warm o'er the Lake
Its splendour at parting a summer eve throws,
Like a bride, full of blushes, when lingering to take
A last look of her mirror at night ere she goes!—
When the shrines through the foliage are gleaming half shown,
And each hallows the hour by some rites of its own.
Here the music of prayer from a minaret swells,
Here the Magian his urn, full of perfume, is swinging,
And here, at the altar, a zone of sweet bells
Round the waist of some fair Indian dancer is ringing.
Or to see it by moonlight,—when mellowly shines
The light o'er its palaces, gardens, and shrines;
When the water-falls gleam, like a quick fall of stars,
And the nightingale's hymn from the Isle of Chenars
Is broken by laughs and light echoes of feet

From the cool shining walks where the young people meet.
Or at morn,—when the magic of daylight awakes
A new wonder each minute, as slowly it breaks,
Hills, cupolas, fountains, call'd forth every one
Out of darkness, as if but just born of the Sun;
When the Spirit of Fragrance is up with the day,
From his Haram of night-flowers stealing away;
And the wind, full of wantonness, woos like a lover
The young aspen-trees, till they tremble all over;
When the East is as warm as the light of first hopes,
And Day, with his banner of radiance unfurl'd,
Shines in through the mountainous portal that opes,
Sublime, from that Valley of Bliss to the world!

But never yet, by night or day,
In dew of spring or summer's ray,
Did the sweet Valley shine so gay
As now it shines — all love and light,
Visions by day and feasts by night!
A happier smile illumes each brow,
With quicker spread each heart uncloses,
And all is ecstasy — for now
The Valley holds its Feast of Roses;
The joyous time, when pleasures pour
Profusely round, and in their shower
Hearts open, like the Season's Rose,—
The Floweret of a hundred leaves,
Expanding while the dew-fall flows,
And every leaf its balm receives.

'T was when the hour of evening came
Upon the Lake, serene and cool,
When Day had hid his sultry flame
Behind the palms of Baramoule,
When maids began to lift their heads,
Refresh'd from their embroider'd beds
Where they had slept the sun away,
And waked to moonlight and to play.
All were abroad — the busiest hive
On Bela's hills is less alive,
When saffron-beds are full in flower,
Than look'd the Valley in that hour.
A thousand restless torches play'd
Through every grove and island shade;
A thousand sparkling lamps were set
On every dome and minaret;
And fields and pathways, far and near,
Were lighted by a blaze so clear
That you could see, in wandering round,
The smallest rose-leaf on the ground.
Yet did the maids and matrons leave
Their veils at home, that brilliant eve;
And there were glancing eyes about,
And cheeks, that would not dare shine out
In open day, but thought they might
Look lovely then, because 't was night.
And all were free, and wandering,
And all exclaim'd to all they met,
That never did the summer bring
So gay a Feast of Roses yet; —

The moon had never shed a light
So clear as that which bless'd them there;
The roses ne'er shone half so bright,
Nor they themselves look'd half so fair.

And what a wilderness of flowers!
It seem'd as though from all the bowers
And fairest fields of all the year,
The mingled spoil were scatter'd here.
The Lake, too, like a garden breathes,
With the rich buds that o'er it lie,—
As if a shower of fairy wreaths
Had fallen upon it from the sky!
And then the sounds of joy,—the beat
Of tabors and of dancing feet;—
The minaret-crier's chant of glee
Sung from his lighted gallery,
And answer'd by a ziraleet
From neighbouring Haram, wild and sweet;
The merry laughter, echoing
From gardens, where the silken swing
Wafts some delighted girl above
The top leaves of the orange grove;
Or, from those infant groups at play
Among the tents that line the way,
Flinging, unawed by slave or mother,
Handfuls of roses at each other.

Then, the sounds from the Lake, the low whispering
in boats,

As they shoot through the moonlight; the dipping
of oars,
And the wild airy warbling that everywhere floats,
Through the groves, round the islands,—as if all
the shores,
Like those of Kathay, utter'd music, and gave
An answer in song to the kiss of each wave.
But the gentlest of all are those sounds, full of feeling,
That soft from the lute of some lover are stealing,—
Some lover who knows all the heart-touching power
Of a lute and a sigh in this magical hour.
Oh, best of delights as it everywhere is
To be near the loved One,—what a rapture is his
Who in moonlight and music thus sweetly may glide
O'er the Lake of Cashmere, with that One by his side!
If woman can make the worst wilderness dear,
Think, think what a Heaven she must make of Cashmere!

So felt the magnificent Son of Acbar,
When from power and pomp and the trophies of war
He flew to that Valley, forgetting them all
With the Light of the Haram, his young Nourmahal.
When free and uncrown'd as the Conqueror roved
By the banks of that Lake, with his only beloved,
He saw, in the wreaths she would playfully snatch
From the hedges, a glory his crown could not match,
And preferr'd in his heart the least ringlet that curl'd
Down her exquisite neck to the throne of the world.

There 's a beauty, forever unchangingly bright,
Like the long sunny lapse of a summer-day's light,
Shining on, shining on, by no shadow made tender,
Till Love falls asleep in its sameness of splendour.
This was not the beauty — oh, nothing like this,—
That to young Nourmahal gave such magic of bliss!
But that loveliness, ever in motion, which plays
Like the light upon autumn's soft shadowy days,
Now here and now there, giving warmth as it flies
From the lip to the cheek, from the cheek to the eyes;
Now melting in mist and now breaking in gleams,
Like the glimpses a saint hath of Heaven in his dreams.

When pensive, it seem'd as if that very grace,
That charm of all others, was born with her face!
And when angry,—for e'en in the tranquillest climes
Light breezes will ruffle the blossoms sometimes,—
The short, passing anger but seem'd to awaken
New beauty, like flowers that are sweetest when shaken.

If tenderness touch'd her, the dark of her eye
At once took a darker, a heavenlier dye,
From the depth of whose shadow, like holy revealings
From innermost shrines, came the light of her feelings.

Then her mirth—oh, 'twas sportive as ever took wing
From the heart with a burst, like the wild-bird in spring;
Illumed by a wit that would fascinate sages,
Yet playful as Peris just loosed from their cages.

While her laugh, full of life, without any control
But the sweet one of gracefulness, rung from her soul;
And where it most sparkled no glance could discover,
In lip, cheek, or eyes, for she brighten'd all over,—
Like any fair lake that the breeze is upon,
When it breaks into dimples and laughs in the sun.
Such, such were the peerless enchantments that gave
Nourmahal the proud Lord of the East for her slave:
And tho' bright was his Haram—a living parterre
Of the flowers of this planet,—though treasures were there
For which Soliman's self might have given all the store
That the navy from Ophir e'er wing'd to his shore,
Yet dim before her were the smiles of them all,
And the Light of his Haram was young Nourmahal!

But where is she now, this night of joy,
When bliss is every heart's employ?—
When all around her is so bright,
So like the visions of a trance,
That one might think, who came by chance
Into the Vale this happy night,
He saw that City of Delight
In Fairy-land whose streets and towers
Are made of gems and light and flowers!—
Where is the loved Sultana? where,
When mirth brings out the young and fair,

Does she, the fairest, hide her brow,
In melancholy stillness now?

Alas! — how light a cause may move
Dissension between hearts that love!
Hearts that the world in vain had tried,
And sorrow but more closely tied;
That stood the storm when waves were rough,
Yet in a sunny hour fall off,—
Like ships that have gone down at sea,
When heaven was all tranquillity!
A something, light as air — a look,
A word unkind or wrongly taken,—
Oh, love, that tempests never shook,
A breath, a touch like this hath shaken.
And ruder words will soon rush in
To spread the breach that words begin;
And eyes forget the gentle ray
They wore in courtship's smiling day;
And voices lose the tone that shed
A tenderness round all they said;
Till fast declining, one by one,
The sweetnesses of love are gone,
And hearts, so lately mingled, seem
Like broken clouds,— or like the stream,
That smiling left the mountain's brow
As though its waters ne'er could sever,
Yet, ere it reach the plain below,
Breaks into floods, that part forever.

Oh, you that have the charge of Love,
Keep him in rosy bondage bound,
As in the Fields of Bliss above
He sits, with flowerets fetter'd round;
Loose not a tie that round him clings,
Nor ever let him use his wings;
For e'en an hour, a minute's flight
Will rob the plumes of half their light:
Like that celestial bird,— whose nest
Is found beneath far Eastern skies,—
Whose wings, though radiant when at rest,
Lose all their glory when he flies!

Some difference, of this dangerous kind,
By which, though light, the links that bind
The fondest hearts may soon be riven,—
Some shadow in Love's summer heaven,
Which, though a fleecy speck at first,
May yet in awful thunder burst,—
Such cloud it is that now hangs over
The heart of the Imperial Lover,
And far hath banish'd from his sight
His Nourmahal, his Haram's Light!
Hence is it, on this happy night,
When Pleasure through the fields and groves
Has let loose all her world of loves,
And every heart has found its own,
He wanders, joyless and alone,
And weary as that bird of Thrace
Whose pinion knows no resting-place.

In vain the loveliest cheeks and eyes
This Eden of the Earth supplies
Come crowding round: the cheeks are pale,
The eyes are dim: — though rich the spot
With every flower this earth has got,
What is it to the nightingale,
If there his darling rose is not?
In vain the Valley's smiling throng
Worship him, as he moves along;
He heeds them not — one smile of hers
Is worth a world of worshippers.
They but the Star's adorers are,
She is the Heaven that lights the Star!

Hence is it, too, that Nourmahal,
Amid the luxuries of this hour,
Far from the joyous festival,
Sits in her own sequester'd bower,
With no one near, to soothe or aid,
But that inspired and wondrous maid,
Namouna, the Enchantress,— one
O'er whom his race the golden sun
For unremember'd years has run,
Yet never saw her blooming brow
Younger or fairer than 't is now.
Nay, rather,— as the west wind's sigh
Freshens the flower it passes by,—
Time's wing but seem'd, in stealing o'er,
To leave her lovelier than before.
Yet on her smiles a sadness hung,
And when, as oft, she spoke or sung

Of other worlds, there came a light
From her dark eyes so strangely bright
That all believed nor man nor earth
Were conscious of Namouna's birth!
All spells and talismans she knew,
From the great Mantra, which around
The Air's sublimer Spirits drew,
To the gold gems of Afric, bound
Upon the wandering Arab's arm,
To keep him from the Siltim's harm.
And she had pledged her powerful art,—
Pledged it with all the zeal and heart
Of one who knew, though high her sphere,
What 't was to lose a love so dear,—
To find some spell that should recall
Her Selim's smile to Nourmahal!

'T was midnight; through the lattice, wreathed
With woodbine, many a perfume breathed
From plants that wake when others sleep,—
From timid jasmine buds, that keep
Their odour to themselves all day,
But when the sunlight dies away
Let the delicious secret out
To every breeze that roams about,—
When thus Namouna: 'T is the hour
That scatters spells on herb and flower,
And garlands might be gather'd now,
That, twined around the sleeper's brow,
Would make him dream of such delights,

Such miracles and dazzling sights,
As Genii of the Sun behold,
At evening, from their tents of gold,
Upon the horizon — where they play
Till twilight comes, and, ray by ray,
Their sunny mansions melt away.
Now, too, a chaplet might be wreathed
Of buds o'er which the moon has breathed,
Which, worn by her whose love has stray'd,
Might bring some Peri from the skies,
Some sprite, whose very soul is made
Of flowerets' breaths and lovers' sighs,
And who might tell'——
'For me, for me,'
Cried Nourmahal impatiently,—
'Oh, twine that wreath for me to-night!'
Then, rapidly, with foot as light
As the young musk-roe's, out she flew,
To cull each shining leaf that grew
Beneath the moonlight's hallowing beams,
For this enchanted Wreath of Dreams.
Anemones and Seas of Gold,
And new-blown lilies of the river,
And those sweet flowerets that unfold
Their buds on Camadeva's quiver;
The tuberose, with her silvery light,
That in the Gardens of Malay
Is call'd the Mistress of the Night,—
So like a bride, scented and bright,
She comes out when the sun's away;

Amaranths, such as crown the maids
That wander through Zamara's shades;
And the white moon-flower, as it shows,
On Serendib's high crags, to those
Who near the isle at evening sail,
Scenting her clove-trees in the gale;
In short, all flowerets and all plants,—
From the divine Amrita tree,
That blesses heaven's inhabitants
With fruits of immortality,
Down to the basil tuft, that waves
Its fragrant blossom over graves,
And to the humble rosemary,
Whose sweets so thanklessly are shed
To scent the desert and the dead;—
All in that garden bloom, and all
Are gather'd by young Nourmahal,
Who heaps her baskets with the flowers
And leaves, till they can hold no more;
Then to Namouna flies, and showers
Upon her lap the shining store.

With what delight the Enchantress views
So many buds, bathed with the dews
And beams of that bless'd hour!—her glance
Spoke something, past all mortal pleasures,
As, in a kind of holy trance,
She hung above those fragrant treasures,
Bending to drink their balmy airs,
As if she mix'd her soul with theirs.

And 't was, indeed, the perfume shed
From flowers and scented flame, that fed
Her charmed life — for none had e'er
Beheld her taste of mortal fare,
Nor ever in aught earthly dip,
But the morn's dew, her roseate lip.
Fill'd with the cool inspiring smell,
The Enchantress now begins her spell,
Thus singing as she winds and weaves
In mystic form the glittering leaves: —

'I know where the wing'd visions dwell
That round the night-bed play;
I know each herb and floweret's bell,
Where they hide their wings by day.
Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid;
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.

'The image of love, that nightly flies
To visit the bashful maid,
Steals from the jasmine flower, that sighs
Its soul, like her, in the shade.
The dream of a future happier hour,
That alights on misery's brow,
Springs out of the silvery almond-flower,
That blooms on a leafless bough.
Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid;
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.

'The visions, that oft to worldly eyes
The glitter of mines unfold,
Inhabit the mountain-herb that dyes
The tooth of the fawn like gold.
The phantom shapes — oh, touch not them! —
That appal the murderer's sight,
Lurk in the fleshly mandrake's stem,
That shrieks, when pluck'd at night!
Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid;
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.

'The dream of the injured, patient mind,
That smiles at the wrongs of men,
Is found in the bruised and wounded rind
Of the cinnamon, sweetest then.
Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid;
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.'

No sooner was the flowery crown
Placed on her head, than sleep came down,
Gently as nights of summer fall,
Upon the lids of Nourmahal;
And, suddenly, a tuneful breeze,—
As full of small, rich harmonies
As ever wind that o'er the tents
Of Azab blew was full of scents,—
Steals on her ear, and floats and swells,
Like the first air of morning creeping
Into those wreathy, Red-Sea shells,
Where Love himself, of old, lay sleeping;

And now a Spirit, form'd, 't would seem,
Of music and of light,— so fair,
So brilliantly his features beam,
And such a sound is in the air
Of sweetness when he waves his wings,—
Hovers around her, and thus sings:—

'From Chindara's warbling fount I come,
Call'd by that moonlight garland spell;
From Chindara's fount, my fairy home,
Where in music, morn and night, I dwell:
Where lutes in the air are heard about,
And voices are singing, the whole day long,
And every sigh the heart breathes out
Is turn'd, as it leaves the lips, to song!
Hither I come
From my fairy home;
And if there's a magic in Music's strain,
I swear by the breath
Of that moonlight wreath,
Thy Lover shall sigh at thy feet again.

'For mine is the lay that lightly floats,
And mine are the murmuring, dying notes,
That fall as soft as snow on the sea,
And melt in the heart as instantly;
And the passionate strain that, deeply going,
Refines the bosom it trembles through,
As the musk-wind, over the water blowing,
Ruffles the wave, but sweetens it too.

'Mine is the charm whose mystic sway
The Spirits of past Delight obey;
Let but the tuneful talisman sound,
And they come, like Genii, hovering round.
And mine is the gentle song that bears
From soul to soul, the wishes of love,
As a bird that wafts through genial airs
The cinnamon-seed from grove to grove.

'T is I that mingle in one sweet measure
The past, the present, and future of pleasure;
When Memory links the tone that is gone
With the blissful tone that's still in the ear;
And Hope from a heavenly note flies on
To a note more heavenly still that is near.

'The warrior's heart, when touch'd by me,
Can as downy soft and as yielding be
As his own white plume, that high amid death
Thro' the field hast shone—yet moves with a breath!
And oh, how the eyes of Beauty glisten,
When Music has reach'd her inward soul,
Like the silent stars, that wink and listen
While Heaven's eternal melodies roll.
So, hither I come
From my fairy home;
And if there's a magic in Music's strain,
I swear by the breath
Of that moonlight wreath,
Thy Lover shall sigh at thy feet again.'

'T is dawn — at least that earlier dawn,
Whose glimpses are again withdrawn,

As if the morn had waked, and then
Shut close her lids of light again.
And Nourmahal is up and trying
The wonders of her lute, whose strings —
Oh, bliss! — now murmur like the sighing
From that ambrosial Spirit's wings.
And then, her voice — 't is more than human;
Never, till now, had it been given
To lips of any mortal woman
To utter notes so fresh from heaven;
Sweet as the breath of angel sighs,
When angel sighs are most divine.—
'Oh, let it last till night,' she cries,
'And he is more than ever mine!'
And hourly she renews the lay,
So fearful lest its heavenly sweetness
Should, ere the evening, fade away,—
For things so heavenly have such fleetness!
But, far from fading, it but grows
Richer, diviner, as it flows;
Till rapt she dwells on every string,
And pours again each sound along,
Like echo, lost and languishing,
In love with her own wondrous song.

That evening (trusting that his soul
Might be from haunting love released
By mirth, by music, and the bowl),
The Imperial Selim held a feast
In his magnificent Shalimar:

In whose Saloons, when the first star
Of evening o'er the waters trembled,
The Valley's loveliest all assembled;
All the bright creatures that, like dreams,
Glide through its foliage, and drink beams
Of beauty from its founts and streams;
And all those wandering minstrel-maids,
Who leave — how can they leave? — the shades
Of that dear Valley, and are found
Singing in Gardens of the South
Those songs, that ne'er so sweetly sound
As from a young Cashmerian's mouth.
There, too, the Haram's inmates smile:
Maids from the West, with sun-bright hair,
And from the Garden of the Nile,
Delicate as the roses there;
Daughters of Love from Cyprus' rocks,
With Paphian diamonds in their locks;
Light Peri forms, such as there are
On the gold meads of Candahar;
And they, before whose sleepy eyes
In their own bright Kathaian bowers,
Sparkle such rainbow butterflies,
That they might fancy the rich flowers
That round them in the sun lay sighing
Had been by magic all set flying.

Everything young, everything fair,
From East and West is blushing there,
Except — except — O Nourmahal!

Thou loveliest, dearest of them all,
The one whose smile shone out alone,
Amidst a world the only one;
Whose light, among so many lights,
Was like that star on starry nights
The seaman singles from the sky
To steer his bark forever by!
Thou wert not there — so Selim thought,—
And everything seem'd drear without thee;
But ah! thou wert, thou wert,— and brought
Thy charm of song all fresh about thee.
Mingling unnoticed with a band
Of lutanists from many a land,
And veil'd by such a mask as shades
The features of young Arab maids —
A mask that leaves but one eye free,
To do its best in witchery,—
She roved, with beating heart, around,
And waited, trembling, for the minute
When she might try if still the sound
Of her loved lute had magic in it.

The board was spread with fruits and wine:
With grapes of gold, like those that shine
On Casbin's hills; pomegranates full
Of melting sweetness, and the pears
And sunniest apples that Caubul
In all its thousand gardens bears;
Plantains, the golden and the green,

Malaya's nectar'd mangusteen;
Prunes of Bokara, and sweet nuts
From the far groves of Samarcand,
And Basra dates, and apricots,
Seed of the Sun, from Iran's land;
With rich conserve of Visna cherries,
Of orange flowers, and of those berries
That, wild and fresh, the young gazelles
Feed on in Erac's rocky dells; —
All these in richest vases smile,
In baskets of pure santal-wood,
And urns of porcelain from that isle
Sunk underneath the Indian flood,
Whence oft the lucky diver brings
Vases to grace the halls of kings.
Wines, too, of every clime and hue,
Around their liquid lustre threw:
Amber Rosolli,— the bright dew
From vineyards of the Green-Sea gushing;
And Shiraz wine, that richly ran
As if that jewel, large and rare,
The ruby for which Kublai-Khan
Offer'd a city's wealth, was blushing
Melted within the goblets there!

And amply Selim quaffs of each,
And seems resolved the flood shall reach
His inward heart, shedding around
A genial deluge, as they run,

That soon shall leave no spot undrown'd,
For Love to rest his wings upon.
He little knew how well the boy
Can float upon a goblet's streams,
Lighting them with his smile of joy; —
As bards have seen him in their dreams,
Down the blue Ganges laughing glide
Upon a rosy lotus wreath,
Catching new lustre from the tide
That with his image shone beneath.

But what are cups, without the aid
Of song to speed them as they flow?
And see — a lovely Georgian maid,
With all the bloom, the freshen'd glow
Of her own country maidens' looks,
When warm they rise from Teflis' brooks;
And with an eye whose restless ray,
Full, floating, dark — oh, he who knows
His heart is weak, of Heaven should pray
To guard him from such eyes as those! —
With a voluptuous wildness flings
Her snowy hand across the strings
Of a syrinda, and thus sings: —

'Come hither, come hither! by night and by day,
We linger in pleasures that never are gone;
Like the waves of the summer, as one dies away,
Another as sweet and as shining comes on.

And the love that is o'er, in expiring, gives birth
To a new one as warm, as unequall'd in bliss;
And oh, if there be an Elysium on earth,
It is this, it is this!

'Here maidens are sighing, and fragrant their sigh
As the flower of the Amra just oped by a bee;
And precious their tears as that rain from the sky,
Which turns into pearls as it falls in the sea.
Oh, think what the kiss and the smile must be worth
When the sigh and the tear are so perfect in bliss;
And own, if there be an Elysium on earth,
It is this, it is this!

'Here sparkles the nectar, that, hallow'd by love,
Could draw down those angels of old from their sphere,
Who for wine of this earth left the fountains above,
And forgot heaven's stars for the eyes we have here.
And, bless'd with the odour our goblet gives forth,
What Spirit the sweets of his Eden would miss?
For oh, if there be an Elysium on earth,
It is this, it is this!'

The Georgian's song was scarcely mute,
When the same measure, sound for sound,
Was caught up by another lute,
And so divinely breathed around,
That all stood hush'd and wondering,
And turn'd and look'd into the air,
As if they thought to see the wing
Of Israfil the Angel there;

So powerfully on every soul
That new, enchanted measure stole.
While now a voice, sweet as the note
Of the charm'd lute, was heard to float
Along its chords, and so entwine
Its sounds with theirs, that none knew whether
The voice or lute was most divine,
So wondrously they went together: —

'There's a bliss beyond all that the minstrel has told,
When two, that are link'd in one heavenly tie,
With heart never changing, and brow never cold,
Love on through all ills, and love on till they die!
One hour of a passion so sacred is worth
Whole ages of heartless and wandering bliss;
And oh, if there be an Elysium on earth,
It is this, it is this!'

'T was not the air, 't was not the words,
But that deep magic in the chords
And in the lips, that gave such power
As Music knew not till that hour.
At once a hundred voices said,
'It is the mask'd Arabian maid!'
While Selim, who had felt the strain
Deepest of any, and had lain
Some minutes rapt, as in a trance,
After the fairy sounds were o'er,
Too inly touch'd for utterance,
Now motion'd with his hand for more: —

'Fly to the desert, fly with me!
Our Arab tents are rude for thee;
But oh, the choice what heart can doubt,
Of tents with love, or thrones without?

'Our rocks are rough, but smiling there
The acacia waves her yellow hair,
Lonely and sweet, nor loved the less
For flowering in a wilderness.

'Our sands are bare, but down their slope
The silvery-footed antelope
As gracefully and gaily springs
As o'er the marble courts of kings.

'Then come — thine Arab maid will be
The loved and lone acacia-tree,
The antelope, whose feet shall bless
With their light sound thy loneliness.

'Oh, there are looks and tones that dart
An instant sunshine through the heart,—
As if the soul that minute caught
Some treasure it through life had sought;

'As if the very lips and eyes,
Predestined to have all our sighs,
And never be forgot again,
Sparkled and spoke before us then!

'So came thine every glance and tone,
When first on me they breathed and shone;
New, as if brought from other spheres,
Yet welcome as if loved for years.

'Then fly with me,—if thou hast known
No other flame, nor falsely thrown
A gem away, that thou hadst sworn
Should ever in thy heart be worn.

'Come, if the love thou hast for me
Is pure and fresh as mine for thee,—
Fresh as the fountain under ground,
When first 't is by the lapwing found.

'But if for me thou dost forsake
Some other maid, and rudely break
Her worshipp'd image from its base,
To give to me the ruin'd place,—

'Then, fare thee well—I 'd rather make
My bower upon some icy lake
When thawing suns begin to shine,
Than trust to love so false as thine!'

There was a pathos in this lay
That, e'en without enchantment's art,
Would instantly have found its way
Deep into Selim's burning heart;
But breathing, as it did, a tone
To earthly lutes and lips unknown,
With every chord fresh from the touch
Of Music's Spirit,—'t was too much!
Starting, he dash'd away the cup,—
Which all the time of this sweet air
His hand had held, untasted, up,
As if 't were fix'd by magic there,—

And naming her, so long unnamed,
So long unseen, wildly exclaim'd,
'O Nourmahal! O Nourmahal!
Hadst thou but sung this witching strain,
I could forget — forgive thee all,
And never leave those eyes again.'

The mask is off — the charm is wrought —
And Selim to his heart has caught,
In blushes, more than ever bright,
His Nourmahal, his Haram's Light!
And well do vanish'd frowns enhance
The charm of every brighten'd glance;
And dearer seems each dawning smile
For having lost its light awhile;
And, happier now for all her sighs,
As on his arm her head reposes,
She whispers him with laughing eyes,
'Remember, love, the Feast of Roses!'

FADLADEEN, at the conclusion of this light rhapsody, took occasion to sum up his opinion of the young Cashmerian's poetry,— of which, he trusted, they had that evening heard the last. Having recapitulated the epithets "frivolous"—"inharmonious"—"nonsensical," he proceeded to say that, viewing it in the most favourable light, it resembled one of those Maldivian boats to which the Princess had alluded in the relation of her dream,— a slight, gilded thing, sent adrift without rudder or ballast, and with nothing but vapid sweets and faded flowers on board. The profusion, indeed, of flowers and birds which this poet had ready on all occasions, — not to mention dews, gems, etc.,— was a most oppressive kind of opulence to his hearers; and had the unlucky effect of giving to his style all the glitter of the flower-garden without its method, and all the flutter of the aviary without its song. In addition to this, he chose his subjects badly, and was always most inspired by the worst parts of them. The charms of paganism, the merits of rebellion,— these were the themes honoured with his particular enthusiasm; and, in the poem just recited, one of his most palatable passages was in praise of that beverage of the Unfaithful, wine; — "being, perhaps," said he, relaxing into a smile, as conscious of his own character in the Haram on this point, "one of those bards whose fancy owes all its illumination to the grape, like that painted porcelain, so curious and so rare, whose images are only visible when liquor is poured into it." Upon the whole, it was his opinion, from the specimens which they had heard, and which, he begged to say, were the most tiresome part of the journey, that — whatever other merits this well-dressed young gentleman might possess — poetry was by no means his proper avocation: "and indeed," concluded the critic, "from his fondness for flowers and for birds, I would venture to suggest that a florist or a bird-catcher is a much more suitable calling for him than a poet."

They had now begun to ascend those barren mountains which separate Cashmere from the rest of India; and as the heats were intolerable, and the time of their encampments limited to the few hours necessary for refreshment and repose, there was an end to all their delightful evenings, and Lalla Rookh saw no more of Feramorz. She now felt that her short dream of happiness was over, and that she had nothing but the recollection of its few blissful hours, like the one draught of sweet water that serves the camel across the wilderness, to be her heart's refreshment during the dreary waste of life that was before her. The blight that had fallen upon her spirits soon found its way to her cheek, and her ladies saw with regret — though not without some suspicion of the cause — that the beauty of their mistress, of which they were almost as proud as of their own, was fast vanishing away at the very moment of all when she had most need of it. What must the King of Bucharia feel, when, instead of the lively and beautiful Lalla Rookh, whom the poets of Delhi had described as more perfect than the divinest images in the house of Azor, he should receive a pale and inanimate victim, upon whose cheek neither health nor pleasure bloomed, and from whose eyes Love had fled,— to hide himself in her heart?

If anything could have charmed away the melancholy of her spirits, it would have been the fresh airs and enchanting scenery of that Valley which the Persians so justly called the Unequalled. But neither the coolness of its atmosphere, so luxurious after toiling up those bare and burning mountains, —neither the splendor of the minarets and pagodas that shone out from the depth of its woods, nor the grottos, hermitages, and miraculous fountains which make every spot of that region holy ground,— neither the countless water-falls that rush into the Valley from all those high and romantic mountains that encircle it, nor the fair city on the Lake, whose houses, roofed with flowers, appeared at a distance like one vast and variegated parterre; — not all these wonders and glories of the most lovely country under the sun could steal her heart for a minute from those sad thoughts, which but darkened and grew bitterer every step she advanced.

The gay pomps and processions that met her

upon her entrance into the Valley, and the magnificence with which the roads all along were decorated, did honour to the taste and gallantry of the young King. It was night when they approached the city, and, for the last two miles, they had passed under arches, thrown from hedge to hedge, festooned with only those rarest roses from which the Attar Gul, more precious than gold, is distilled, and illuminated in rich and fanciful forms with lanterns of the triple-coloured tortoise-shell of Pegu. Sometimes, from a dark wood by the side of the road, a display of fireworks would break out, so sudden and so brilliant, that a Brahmin might fancy he beheld that grove in whose purple shade the God of Battles was born, bursting into a flame at the moment of his birth;—while, at other times, a quick and playful irradiation continued to brighten all the fields and gardens by which they passed, forming a line of dancing lights along the horizon; like the meteors of the north, as they are seen by those hunters who pursue the white and blue foxes on the confines of the Icy Sea.

These arches and fireworks delighted the Ladies of the Princess exceedingly; and with their usual good logic, they deduced from his taste for illuminations, that the King of Bucharia would make the most exemplary husband imaginable. Nor, indeed, could Lalla Rookh herself help feeling the kindness and splendour with which the young bridegroom welcomed her; but she also felt how painful is the gratitude which kindness from those we cannot love excites; and that their best blandishments come over the heart with all that chilling and deadly sweetness which we can fancy in the cold, odoriferous wind that is to blow over this earth in the last days.

The marriage was fixed for the morning after her arrival, when she was, for the first time, to be presented to the monarch in that Imperial Palace beyond the lake called the Shalimar. Though never before had a night of more wakeful and anxious thought been passed in the Happy Valley, yet, when she rose in the morning, and her Ladies came around her, to assist in the adjustment of the bridal ornaments, they thought they had never seen her look half so beautiful. What she had lost of the bloom and radiancy of her charms was more than made up by that intellectual expression, that soul beaming forth from the eyes, which is worth all the rest of loveliness. When they had tinged her fingers with the Henna leaf, and placed upon her brow a small coronet of jewels, of the shape worn by the ancient Queens of Bucharia, they flung over her head the rose-coloured bridal veil, and she proceeded to the barge that was to convey her across the Lake; —first kissing, with a mournful look, the little amulet of cornelian which her father at parting had hung about her neck.

The morning was as fresh and fair as the maid on whose nuptials it rose, and the shining Lake, all covered with boats, the minstrels playing upon the shores of the islands, and the crowded summer-houses on the green hills around, with shawls and banners waving from their roofs, presented such a picture of animated rejoicing, as only she, who was the object of it all, did not feel with transport. To Lalla Rookh alone it was a melancholy pageant; nor could she have even borne to look upon the scene, were it not for a hope that, among the crowds around, she might once more perhaps catch a glimpse of Feramorz. So much was her imagination haunted by this thought, that there was scarcely an islet or boat she passed on the way, at which her heart did not flutter with the momentary fancy that he was there. Happy, in her eyes, the humblest slave upon whom the light of his dear looks fell!—in the barge immediately after the Princess sat Fadladeen, with his silken curtains thrown widely apart, that all might have the benefit of his august presence, and with his head full of the speech he was to deliver to the King, "concerning Feramorz, and literature, and the Chabuk, as connected therewith."

They now had entered the canal which leads from the Lake to the splendid domes and saloons of the Shalimar, and went gliding on through the gardens that ascended from each bank, full of flowering shrubs that made the air all perfume; while from the middle of the canal rose jets of water, smooth and unbroken, to such a dazzling height, that they stood like tall pillars of diamond in the sunshine. After sailing under the arches of various saloons, they at length arrived at the last and most magnificent, where the monarch awaited the coming of his bride; and such was the agitation of her heart and frame that it was with difficulty she could walk up the marble steps, which were covered with cloth of gold for her ascent from the barge. At the end of the hall stood two thrones, as precious as the Cerulean Throne of Coolburga, on one of which sat Aliris, the youthful King of Bucharia, and on the other was, in a few minutes, to be placed the most beautiful Princess in the world. Immediately upon the entrance of Lalla Rookh into the saloon, the monarch descended from his throne to meet her; but scarcely had he time to take her hand in his, when she screamed with surprise, and fainted at his feet. It was Feramorz himself that stood before her! Feramorz was, himself, the Sovereign of Bucharia, who in this disguise had accompanied his young bride from Delhi, and, having won her love as an humble minstrel, now amply deserved to enjoy it as a King.

The consternation of Fadladeen at this discovery was, for the moment, almost pitiable. But change of opinion is a resource too convenient in courts for this experienced courtier not to have learned to avail himself of it. His criticisms were all, of course, recanted instantly: he was seized with an admiration of the King's verses, as unbounded as, he begged him to believe, it was disinterested; and the following week saw him in possession of an additional place, swearing by all the Saints of Islam that never had there existed so great a poet as the Monarch Aliris, and, moreover, ready to prescribe his favourite regimen of the Chabuk for every man, woman, and child that dared to think otherwise.

Of the happiness of the King and Queen of Bucharia, after such a beginning, there can be but little doubt; and, among the lesser symptoms, it is recorded of Lalla Rookh, that, to the day of her death, in memory of their delightful journey, she never called the King by any other name than Feramorz.

AUTHOR'S NOTES.

Page 21.—He embarked for Arabia.—These particulars of the visit of the King of Bucharia to Aurungzebe are found in Dow's "History of Hindostan," vol. iii. p. 392.

P. 21.—Lalla Rookh.—Tulip cheek.

P. 21.—Leila.—The mistress of Mejnoun, upon whose story so many romances in all the languages of the East are founded.

P. 21.—Shirine.—For the loves of this celebrated beauty with Khosrou and with Ferhad, see D'Herbelot, Gibbon, "Oriental Collections," etc.

P. 21.—Dewildé.—"The history of the loves of Dewildé and Chizer, the son of the Emperor Alla, is written in an elegant poem, by the noble Chusero."—(Ferishta.)

P. 22.—Scattering of the Roses.—Gul Reazee.

P. 22.—Insignia of the Emperor's favour.—"One mark of honour or knighthood bestowed by the Emperor is the permission to wear a small kettledrum at the bows of their saddles, which at first was invented for the training of hawks, and to call them to the lure, and is worn in the field by all sportsmen to that end."—(Fryer's Travels.)

"Those on whom the King has conferred the privilege must wear an ornament of jewels on the right side of the turban, surmounted by a high plume of the feathers of a kind of egret. This bird is found only in Cashmere, and the feathers are carefully collected for the King, who bestows them on his nobles."—(Elphinstone's Account of Caubul.)

P. 22.—The great Keder Khan.—"Khedar Khan, the Khakan, or King of Turquestan beyond the Gihon (at the end of the eleventh century), whenever he appeared abroad, was preceded by seven hundred horsemen with silver battle-axes, and was followed by an equal number bearing maces of gold. He was a great patron of poetry, and it was he who used to preside at public exercises of genius, with four basins of gold and silver by him to distribute among the poets who excelled." —(Richardson's "Dissertation," prefixed to his Dictionary.)

P. 23.—Gilt pine-apples.—"The kubdeh, a large golden knob, generally in the shape of a pine-apple, on the top of the canopy over the litter or palanquin."—(Scott's "Notes on the Bahardanush.")

P. 23.—The Princess's own sumptuous litter.—In the poem of "Zohair," in the "Moallakat," there is the following lively description of "a company of maidens seated on camels": —

"They are mounted in carriages covered with costly awnings, and with rose-coloured veils, the linings of which have the hue of crimson Andem-wood.

"When they ascend from the bosom of the vale, they sit forward on the saddle-cloth, with every mark of a voluptuous gayety.

"Now, when they have reached the brink of yon blue-gushing rivulet, they fix the poles of their tents like the Arab with a settled mansion."

P. 23.—With feathers of the Argus pheasant's wing.—See Bernier's description of the attendants on Raucha-nara Begum, in her progress to Cashmere.

P. 24.—Aurungzebe was a munificent protector.—This hypocritical Emperor would have made a worthy associate of certain Holy Leagues. "He held the cloak of religion," says Dow, "between his actions and the vulgar; and impiously thanked the Divinity for a success which he owed to his own wickedness. When he was murdering and persecuting his brothers and their families, he was building a magnificent mosque at Delhi, as an offering to God for his assistance to him in the civil wars. He acted as high priest at the consecration of this temple; and made a practice of attending Divine service there, in the humble dress of a Fakeer. But when he lifted one hand to the Divinity, he, with the other, signed warrants for the assassination of his relations."—("History of Hindostan," vol. iii. p. 335.) See also the curious letter of Aurungzebe, given in the "Oriental Collections," vol. i. p. 320.

P. 24.—The diamond eyes of the Idol of Jaghernaut.—"The idol at Jaghernaut has two fine diamonds for eyes. No goldsmith is suffered to enter the Pagoda, one having stolen one of these eyes, being locked up all night with the Idol."—(Tavernier.)

P. 24.—Royal Gardens of Delhi.—See a description of these Royal Gardens in "An Account of the Present State of Delhi," by Lieut. W. Franklin; "Asiatic Researches," vol. iv. p. 417.

P. 24.—Lake of Pearl.—"In the neighbourhood is Notte Gill, or the Lake of Pearl, which receives this name from its pellucid water."—(Pennant's "Hindostan.")

"Nasir Jung, encamped in the vicinity of the Lake of Tonoor, amused himself with sailing on that clear and beautiful water, and gave it the fanciful name of Motee Talah, 'the Lake of Pearls,' which it still retains."—(Wilke's "South of India.")

P. 25.—Zal and his mistress Rodahver.—Their amour is recounted in the Shah-Namêh of Ferdousi; and there is much beauty in the passage which describes the slaves of Rodahver sitting on the bank of the river, and throwing flowers into the stream, in order to draw the attention of the young Hero who is encamped on the opposite side.—(See Champion's translation.)

P. 25.—The Combat of Rustam.—Rustam is the Hercules of the Persians. For the particulars of his victory over the Sepeed Deeve, or White Demon, see "Oriental Collections," vol. ii. p. 45.

"Near the city of Shirauz is an immense quadrangular monument, in commemoration of this combat, called the Kelaat-i-Deev Sepeed, or castle of the White Giant, which Father Angelo, in his "Gazophilacium Persicum," p. 127, declares to have been the most memorable monument of antiquity which he had seen in Persia."—(See Ouseley's "Persian Miscellanies.")

P. 25.—Tinkling of their golden anklets.—"The women of the Idol, or dancing girls of the Pagoda, have little golden bells fastened to their feet, and the soft harmonious tinkling of which vibrates in unison with the exquisite melody of their voices."—(Maurice's "Indian Antiquities.")

"The Arabian courtesans, like the Indian women, have little golden bells fastened round their legs, neck, and elbows, to the sound of which they dance before the King. The Arabian princesses wear golden rings on their fingers, to which little bells are suspended, as well as in the flowing tresses of their hair, that their superior rank may be known, and they themselves receive in passing the homage due to them."—(See Calmet's Dictionary, art. "Bells.")

P. 25.—That delicious opium.—"Abou-Tige, ville de la Thébaïde, où il croit beaucoup de pavot noir, dont se fait le meilleur opium."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 26.—Crishna.—The Indian Apollo. "He and the three Rámas are described as youths of perfect beauty; and the princesses of Hindustán were all passionately in love with Crishna, who continues to this hour the darling God of the Indian women."—(Sir W. Jones on the Gods of Greece, Italy, and India.)

P. 26.—The shawl-goats of Tibet.—See Turner's "Embassy" for a description of this animal, "the most beautiful among the whole tribe of goats." The material for the shawls (which is carried to Cashmere) is found next the skin.

P. 27.—Veiled Prophet of Khorassan.—For the real history of this Impostor, whose original name was Hakem ben Haschem, and who was called Mokanna from the veil of silver gauze (or, as others say, golden) which he always wore, see D'Herbelot.

P. 29.—Province of the Sun.—"Khorassan signifies, in the old Persian language, Province or Region of the Sun."—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 29.—Flowerets and fruits.—"The fruits of Meru are finer than those of any other place; and one cannot see in any other city such palaces with groves, and streams, and gardens."—(Ebn Haukal's Geography.)

P. 29.—Merou.—One of the royal cities of Khorassan.

P. 29.—Moussa.—Moses.

P. 29.—When down the Mount he trod.—"Ses disciples assuroient qu'il se couvroit le visage, pour ne pas éblouir ceux qui l'approchoient par l'éclat de son visage comme Moyse."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 30.—The Caliph's hue of night.—Black was the colour adopted by the Caliphs of the House of Abbas, in their garments, turbans, and standards.—"Il faut remarquer ici touchant les habits blancs des disciples de Hakem, que la colour des habits, des coiffures et des étendards des Khalifes Abassides étant la noire, ce chef de Rebelles ne pouvoit pas choisir une qui lui fût plus opposée."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 30.—Javelins of the light Kathaian reed.—"Our dark javelins, exquisitely wrought of Khathaian reeds, slender and delicate."—(Poem of "Amru.")

P. 30.—The stems that bloom on Iran's rivers.—Pichula, used anciently for arrows by the Persians. The Persians call this plant Gaz. The celebrated shaft of Isfendiar, one of their ancient heroes, was made of it.—"Nothing can be more beautiful than the appearance of this plant in flower during the rains on the banks of rivers, where it is usually interwoven with a lovely twining asclepias."—(Sir W. Jones, "Botanical Observations on Select Indian Plants.")

P. 30.—Chenar-tree.—The Oriental plane. "The chenar is a delightful tree; its bole is of a fine white and smooth bark;

and its foliage, which grows in a tuft at the summit, is of a bright green."—(Morier's Travels.)

P. 31.—Brahma's burning founts.—The burning fountains of Brahma near Chittagong, esteemed as holy.—(Turner.)

P. 31.—Kathay.—China.

P. 31.—Like tulip-beds.—"The name of tulip is said to be of Turkish extraction, and given to the flower on account of its resembling a turban."—(Beckmann's "History of Inventions.")

P. 31.—Fur-bound bonnet of Bucharian shape.—"The inhabitants of Bucharia wear a round cloth bonnet, shaped much after the Polish fashion, having a large fur border. They tie their kaftans about the middle with a girdle of a kind of silk crape, several times round the body."—(Account of Independent Tartary, in Pinkerton's Collection.)

P. 32.—O'erwhelm'd in fight and captive to the Greek.—In the war of the Caliph Mahadi against the Empress Irene, for an account of which see Gibbon, vol. x.

P. 33.—The flying throne of star-taught Soliman.—This wonderful throne was called the Star of the Genii. For a full description of it, see the Fragment, translated by Captain Franklin, from a Persian MS. entitled, "The History of Jerusalem," ("Oriental Collections," vol. i. p. 235.)—When Soliman travelled, the Eastern writers say, "He had a carpet of green silk on which his throne was placed, being of a prodigious length and breadth, and sufficient for all his forces to stand upon, the men placing themselves on his right hand, and the spirits on his left; and that when all were in order, the wind, at his command, took up the carpet, and transported it, with all that were upon it, wherever he pleased; the army of birds at the same time flying over their heads, and forming a kind of canopy to shade them from the sun."—(Sale's Koran, vol. ii. p. 214, note.)

P. 33.—In every chance and change.—The transmigration of souls was one of Mokanna's doctrines.—(See D'Herbelot.)

P. 34.—All Heaven, except the Proud One, knelt.—"And when we said unto the angels, Worship Adam, they all worshipped except Eblis (Lucifer), who refused."—(The Koran, chap. ii.)

P. 34.—Through many a Prophet's breast.—This is according to D'Herbelot's account of the doctrines of Mokanna:—"Sa doctrine étoit, que Dieu avoit pris une forme et figure humaine, depuis qu'il eut commandé aux Anges d'adorer Adam, le premier des hommes. Qu'après la mort d'Adam, Dieu étoit apparu sous la figure de plusieurs Prophètes, et autres grands hommes qu'il avoit choisis, jusqu'à ce qu'il prit celle d' Abu Moslem, Prince de Khorassan, lequel professoit l'erreur de la Tennassukhiah on Métempsychose; et qu'après la mort de ce Prince, la Divinité étoit passée et descendue en sa personne."

P. 34.—Issa.—Jesus.

P. 37.—That ancient flood.—The Amoo, which rises in the Belur Tag, or Dark Mountains, and, running nearly from east to west, splits into two branches; one of which falls into the Caspian Sea, and the other into Aral Nahr, or the Lake of Eagles.

P. 39.—The bulbul.—The nightingale.

P. 46.—Holy Koom.—The Cities of Com (or Koom) and Cashan are full of mosques, mausoleums, and sepulchres of the descendants of Ali, the Saints of Persia.—(Chardin.)

P. 46.—Kishmee.—An island in the Persian Gulf, celebrated for its white wine.

P. 46.—Zemzem's Spring of Holiness.—The miraculous well at Mecca; so called, says Sale, from the murmuring of its waters.

P. 47.—Whom India serves, the monkey deity.—The God Hannaman.—"Apes are in many parts of India highly venerated, out of respect to the God Hannaman, a deity partaking of the form of that race."—(Pennant's "Hindostan.") See a curious account, in Stephen's "Persia," of a solemn embassy from some part of the Indies to Goa, when the Portuguese were there, offering vast treasures for the recovery of a monkey's tooth, which they held in great veneration, and which had been taken away upon the conquest of the kingdom of Jafanapatan.

P. 47.—Lucifer was right.—The resolution of Eblis not to acknowledge the new creature, man, was, according to Mahometan tradition, thus adopted: — "The earth (which God had selected for the materials of His work) was carried into Arabia to a place between Mecca and Tayef, where, being first kneaded by the angels, it was afterwards fashioned by God himself into a human form, and left to dry for the space of forty days, or, as others say, as many years; the angels, in the meantime, often visiting it, and Eblis (then one of the angels nearest to God's presence, afterwards the devil) among the rest; but he, not contented with looking at it, kicked it with his foot till it rung; and knowing God designed that creature to be his superior, took a secret resolution never to acknowledge him as such."—(Sale on the Koran.)

P. 47.—The light from dead men's marrow.—A kind of lantern formerly used by robbers, called the Hand of Glory, the candle for which was made of the fat of a dead malefactor. This, however, was rather a Western than an Eastern superstition.

P. 48.—Marble of which gods are made.—The material of which images of Gaudma (the Birman Deity) are made, is held sacred. "Birmans may not purchase the marble in mass, but are suffered, and, indeed, encouraged, to buy figures of the Deity ready made."—(Symes's "Ava," vol. ii. p. 376.)

P. 52.—Kerzrah flowers.—"It is commonly said in Persia that if a man breathe in the hot south wind which in June or July passes over that flower (the Kerzereh), it will kill him."—(Thevenot.)

P. 54.—Within the crocodile's stretch'd jaws to come.—The humming-bird is said to run this risk for the purpose of picking the crocodile's teeth. The same circumstance is related of the lapwing, as a fact to which he was witness, by Paul Lucas, Voyage fait en 1714.

The ancient story concerning the Trochilus, or hummingbird, entering with impunity into the mouth of the crocodile, is firmly believed at Java.—(Barrow's "Cochin China.")

P. 56.—That rank and venomous food.—"Circum easdem ripas (Nili, viz.) ales est Ibis. Ea serpentium populatur ova, gratissimamque ex his escam nidis suis refert."—(Solinus.)

P. 57.—Yamtcheou.—"The Feast of Lanterns is celebrated at Yamtcheou with more magnificence than anywhere else: and the report goes that the illuminations there are so splendid that an Emperor once, not daring openly to leave his Court to go thither, committed himself with the Queen and several Princesses of his family into the hands of a magician, who promised to transport them thither in a trice. He made them in the night to ascend magnificent thrones that were borne up by swans, which in a moment arrived at Yamtcheou. The Emperor saw at his leisure all the solemnity, being carried upon a cloud that hovered over the city and descended by degrees; and came back again with the same speed and equipage, nobody at court perceiving his absence."—("The Present State of China," p. 156.)

P. 57.—Sceneries of bamboo-work.—See a description of the nuptials of Vizier Alee in the "Asiatic Annual Register" for 1804.

P. 57.—Origin of these fantastic Chinese illuminations.—"The vulgar ascribe it to an accident that happened in the family of a famous mandarin, whose daughter, walking one evening upon the shore of a lake, fell in and was drowned; the afflicted father, with his family, ran thither, and, the better to find her, he caused a great company of lanterns to be lighted. All the inhabitants of the place thronged after him with torches. The year ensuing they made fires upon the shores the same day; they continued the ceremony every year, every one lighted his lantern, and by degrees it grew into a custom."—("Present State of China.")

they resembled branches of coral."—("Story of Prince Futtun" in "Bahardanush.")

P. 60.—To give that long, dark languish to the eye.—"The women blacken the inside of their eyelids with a powder named the black kohol."—(Russel.)

"None of these ladies take themselves to be completely dressed till they have tinged the hair and edges of their eyelids with the powder of lead ore. Now, as this operation is performed by dipping first into the powder a small wooden bodkin of the thickness of a quill, and then drawing it afterwards through the eyelids over the ball of the eye, we shall have a lively image of what the Prophet (Jer. iv. 30) may be supposed to mean by 'rending the eyes with painting.' This practice is no doubt of great antiquity; for, besides the instance already taken notice of, we find that where Jezebel is said (2 Kings ix. 30) 'to have painted her face,' the original words are, 'she adjusted her eyes with the powder of lead ore.' "—(Shaw's Travels.)

P. 60.—The Champac's leaves of gold.—The appearance of the blossoms of the gold-coloured Champac on the black hair of the Indian women has supplied the Sanscrit poets with many elegant allusions.—(See "Asiatic Researches," vol. iv.)

P. 60.—The sweet Elcaya.—A tree famous for its perfume, and common on the hills of Yemen.—(Niebuhr.)

P. 62.—Odoriferous woods of Comorin.—"C'est d'où vient le bois d'aloës que les Arabes appellent Oud Comari, et celui du sandal, qui s'y trouve en grande quantité."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 62.—The crimson blossoms of the coral tree.—"Thousands of variegated lories visit the coral trees."—(Barrow.)

P. 62.—Mecca's blue sacred pigeon.—"In Mecca there are quantities of blue pigeons, which none will affright or abuse, much less kill."—(Pitt's account of the Mahometans.)

P. 62.—The thrush of Hindostan.—"The Pagoda Thrush is esteemed among the first choristers of India. It sits perched on the sacred pagodas, and from thence delivers its melodious song."—(Pennant's "Hindostan.")

P. 62.—Drunk with that sweet food whose scent hath lured them.—Birds of Paradise, which, at the nutmeg season, come in flights from the southern isles to India; and "the strength of the nutmeg," says Tavernier, "so intoxicates them, that they fall dead drunk to the earth." Tavernier adds, that while the birds of Paradise lie in this intoxicated state, the emmets come and eat off their legs; and that hence it is they are said to have no feet.

P. 62.—Build their high nests of budding cinnamon.—"That bird which liveth in Arabia, and buildeth its nest with cinnamon."—(Browne's "Vulgar Errors.")

P. 62.—Like the green birds.—"The spirits of the martyrs will be lodged in the crops of green birds."—(Gibbon, vol. ix. p. 421.)

P. 62.—That impious King.—Shedad, who made the delicious gardens of Irim, in imitation of Paradise, and was destroyed by lightning the first time he attempted to enter them.

P. 64.—Hum themselves to sleep.—"My Pandits assure me that the plant before us (the Nilica) is their Sephalica, thus named because the bees are supposed to sleep on its blossoms."—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 66.—Captives to the King of Flowers.—"They deferred it till the King of Flowers should ascend his throne of enamelled foliage."—("The Bahardanush.")

P. 67.—A light golden chain-work round her hair.—"One of the head-dresses of the Persian women is composed of a light golden chain-work, set with small pearls, with a thin gold plate pendant, about the bigness of a crown-piece, on which is impressed an Arabian prayer, and which hangs upon the cheek below the ear."—(Hanway's Travels.)

P. 67.—The maids of Yezd and Shiras.—"Certainly the women of Yezd are the handsomest women in Persia. The proverb is, that to live happy a man must have a wife of Yezd, eat the bread of Yezdecas, and drink the wine of Shiras."—(Tavernier.)

P. 67.—Upon a musnud's edge.—Musnuds are cushioned seats, usually reserved for persons of distinction.

P. 67.—Mode of Isfahan.—The Persians, like the ancient Greeks, call their musical modes or Perdas by the names of different countries or cities, as the mode of Isfahan, the mode of Irak, etc.

P. 67.—Bendemeer's stream.—A river which flows near the ruins of Chilminar.

P. 69.—The hills of crystal on the Caspian shore.—"To the north of us (on the coast of the Caspian, near Badku) was a mountain, which sparkled like diamonds, arising from the sea-glass and crystals with which it abounds."—("Journey of the Russian Ambassador to Persia," 1746.)

P. 69.—Trees of Eden, shake in the eternal breeze.—"To which will be added the sound of the bells, hanging on the trees, which will be put in motion by the wind proceeding from the throne of God, as often as the blessed wish for music."—(Sale.)

P. 70.—His floating eyes.—"Whose wanton eyes resemble blue water-lilies, agitated by the breeze."—(Jayadeva.)

P. 70.—Blue water-lilies.—The blue lotus, which grows in Cashmere and in Persia.

P. 71.—The pictures that hung round.—It has been generally supposed that the Mahometans prohibit all pictures of animals; but Toderini shows that, though the practice is forbidden by the Koran, they are not more averse to painted figures and images than other people. From Mr. Murphy's work, too, we find that the Arabs of Spain had no objection to the introduction of figures into painting.

P. 72.—Whose orb when half retired looks loveliest.—This is not quite astronomically true. "Dr. Hadley," says Keil, "has shown that Venus is brightest when she is about forty degrees removed from the sun; and that then but only a fourth part of her lucid disk is to be seen from the earth."

P. 72.—With her from Saba's bowers.—For the loves of King Solomon (who was supposed to preside over the whole race of Genii) with Balkis, the Queen of Sheba or Saba, see D'Herbelot, and the "Notes on the Koran," chap. ii. "In the palace which Solomon ordered to be built against the arrival of the Queen of Saba, the floor or pavement was of transparent glass, laid over running water, in which fish were swimming." This led the Queen into a very natural mistake, which the Koran has not thought beneath its dignity to commemorate. "It was said unto her, 'Enter the palace.' And when she saw it she imagined it to be a great water; and she discovered her legs, by lifting up her robe to pass through it. Whereupon Solomon said to her, 'Verily, this is the place evenly floored with glass.'"—(Chap. xxvii.)

P. 72.—Zuleika.—Wife of Potiphar, thus named by the Orientals. "The passion which this frail beauty of antiquity conceived for her young Hebrew slave has given rise to a much-esteemed poem in the Persian language, entitled 'Yusef vau Zelikha,' by Noureddin Jami, the manuscript copy of which, in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, is supposed to be the finest in the whole world."—(Note upon Nott's Translation of Hafez.)

P. 72.—Forgets the Koran in his Mary's smile.—The particulars of Mahomet's amour with Mary, the Coptic girl, in justification of which he added a new chapter to the Koran, may be found in Gagnier's "Notes upon Abulfeda," p. 151.

P. 73.—That deep-blue melancholy dress.—"Deep blue is their mourning colour."—(Hanway.)

P. 74.—Like the sweet night-flower.—The sorrowful nyctanthes, which begins to spread its rich odour after sunset.

P. 76.—As the viper weaves its wily covering.—"Concerning the vipers, which Pliny says were frequent among the balsam-trees, I made very particular inquiry: several were brought me alive both to Yambo and Jidda."—(Bruce.)

P. 82.—The sunny apples of Istkahar.—"In the territory of Istkahar there is a kind of apple, half of which is sweet and half sour."—(Ebn Haukal.)

P. 82.—She had lighted a small lamp.—For an account of this ceremony, see Grandpré's "Voyage in the Indian Ocean."

P. 82.—The Oton-tala, or Sea of Stars.—"The place where the Whangho, a river of Tibet, rises, and where there are more than a hundred springs, which sparkle like stars; whence it is called Hotun-nor, that is, the Sea of Stars."—(Pinkerton's Description of Tibet.)

P. 84.—This City of War.—"The Lescar or Imperial Camp is divided, like a regular town, into squares, alleys, and streets, and from a rising ground furnishes one of the most agreeable prospects in the world. Starting up in a few hours in an uninhabited plain, it raises the idea of a city built by enchantment. Even those who leave their houses in cities to follow the prince in his progress are frequently so charmed by the Lescar, when situated in a beautiful and convenient place, that they cannot prevail with themselves to remove. To prevent this inconvenience to the court, the Emperor, after sufficient time is allowed to the tradesmen to follow, orders them to be burnt out of their tents."—(Dow's "Hindostan.")

Colonel Wilks gives a lively picture of an Eastern encampment:—"His camp, like that of most Indian armies, exhibited a motley collection of covers from the scorching sun and dews of the night, variegated according to the taste or means of each individual, by extensive inclosures of coloured calico surrounding superb suites of tents; by ragged cloths or blankets stretched over sticks or branches; palm-leaves hastily spread over similar supports; handsome tents and splendid canopies; horses, oxen, elephants, and camels; all intermixed without any exterior mark of order or design, except the flags of the chiefs, which usually mark the centres of a congeries of these masses; the only regular part of the encampment being the streets of shops, each of which is constructed nearly in the manner of a booth at an English fair."—("Historical Sketches of the South of India.")

P. 84.—Built the high pillar'd halls of Chilminar.—The edifices of Chilminar and Balbec are supposed to have been built by the Genii, acting under the orders of Jan ben Jan, who governed the world long before the time of Adam.

P. 84.—And camels, tufted o'er with Yemen's shells.—"A superb camel, ornamented with strings and tufts of small shells."—(Ali Bey.)

P. 84.—The locust bird.—A native of Khorassan, and allured southward by means of the water of a fountain between Shiraz and Ispahan, called the Fountain of Birds, of which it is so fond that it will follow wherever that water is carried.

P. 84.—Laden camels and their drivers' songs.—"Some of the camels have bells about their necks, and some about their legs, like those which our carriers put about their forehorses' necks, which, together with the servants (who belong to the camels, and travel on foot), singing all night, make a pleasant noise, and the journey passes away delightfully."—(Pitt's "Account of the Mahometans.")

"The camel-driver follows the camels, singing, and sometimes playing upon his pipe; the louder he sings and pipes, the faster the camels go. Nay, they will stand still when he gives over his music."—(Tavernier.)

P. 85.—The eagle note of the Abyssinian trumpet.—"This trumpet is often called, in Abyssinia, nesser canno, which signifies the Note of the Eagle."—(Note of Bruce's Editor.)

P. 85.—The Night and Shadow.—The two black standards borne before the Caliphs of the House of Abbas were called, allegorically, the Night and the Shadow.—(See Gibbon.)

P. 85.—Islam.—The Mahometan religion.

P. 85.—Having sworn upon the Holy Grave.—"The Persians swear by the tomb of Shah Besade, who is buried at Casbin; and when one desires another to asseverate a matter, he will ask him if he dare swear by the Holy Grave."—(Struy.)

P. 85.—Were spoil'd to feed the Pilgrim's luxury.—Mahadi, in a single pilgrimage to Mecca, expended six millions of dinars of gold.

P. 86.—Mecca's sun, with urns of Persian snow.—"Nivem Meccam apportavit, rem ibi aut nunquam aut raro visam."—(Abulfeda.)

P. 86.—The People of the Rock.—The inhabitants of Hejaz or Arabia Petræa, called by an Eastern writer "The People of the Rock."—(See Ebn Haukal.)

P. 86.—Steeds of royal stock.—"Those horses, called by the Arabians Kochlani, of whom a written genealogy has been kept for 2,000 years. They are said to derive their origin from King Solomon's steeds."—(Niebuhr.)

P. 86.—Their swords' rich marquetry.—"Many of the figures on the blades of their swords are wrought in gold or silver, or in marquetry with small gems."—("Asiatic Miscellany," v. i.)

P. 86.—The land of Myrrh.—Azab or Saba.

P. 86.—Waving their heron crests.—"The chiefs of the Uzbek Tartars wear a plume of white heron's feathers in their turbans."—(Account of Independent Tartary.)

P. 86.—The turquoise hills.—"In the mountains of Nishapour and Tous (in Khorassan) they find turquoises."—(Ebn Haukal.)

P. 87.—Hindoo Kosh.—For a description of these stupendous ranges of mountains, see Elphinstone's "Caubul."

P. 87.—Her Worshippers of Fire.—The Ghebers or Guebres, those original natives of Persia who adhered to their ancient faith, the religion of Zoroaster, and who, after the conquest of their country by the Arabs, were either persecuted at home or forced to become wanderers abroad.

P. 87.—Yezd's eternal Mansion of the Fire.—"Yezd, the chief residence of those ancient natives who worship the Sun and the Fire, which latter they have carefully kept lighted, without being once extinguished for a moment, about 3,000 years, on a mountain near Yezd, called Ater Quedah, signifying the House or Mansion of the Fire. He is reckoned very unfortunate who dies off that mountain."—(Stephens's "Persia.")

P. 87.—That burn into the Caspian.—"When the weather is hazy, the springs of naphtha (on an island near Baku) boil up the higher, and the naphtha often takes fire on the surface of the earth, and runs in a flame into the sea to a distance almost incredible."—(Hanway on the Everlasting Fire at Baku.)

P. 87.—The prostrate Caravan is awed.—Savary says of the south wind, which blows in Egypt from February to May, "Sometimes it appears only in the shape of an impetuous whirlwind, which passes rapidly, and is fatal to the traveller surprised in the middle of the deserts. Torrents of burning sand roll before it, the firmament is enveloped in a thick veil, and the sun appears of the colour of blood. Sometimes whole caravans are buried in it."

P. 88.—Those angel youths who led.—In the great victory gained by Mahomed at Beder, he was assisted, say the Mussulmans, by three thousand angels, led by Gabriel, mounted on his horse Hiazum.—(See "The Koran and its Commentators.")

P. 89.—"Alla Akbar!"—The Techir, or cry of the Arabs. "Alla Acbar!" says Ockley, means "God is most mighty."

P. 90.—Chant your ziraleets.—The ziraleet is a kind of chorus, which the women of the East sing upon joyful occasions.—(Russel.)

P. 90.—That Syrian Lake.—The Dead Sea, which contains neither animal nor vegetable life.

P. 91.—The Jihon's flood.—The ancient Oxus.

P. 92.—Neksheb's gates.—A city of Transoxiana.

P. 92.—To-day's young flower is springing in its stead.—"You never can cast your eyes on this tree, but you meet there either blossoms or fruit; and as the blossoms drop underneath on the ground (which is frequently covered with these purple-coloured flowers), others come forth in their stead."—(Nieuhoff.)

P. 93.—The Dives.—The Demons of the Persian mythology.

P. 93.—That spangle India's fields on showery nights.—Carreri mentions the fire-flies in India during the rainy seasons. (See his Travels.)

P. 93.—The thousands of the Assyrian King.—Sennacherib, called by the Orientals King of Moussal.—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 94.—The Pillar'd throne of Parviz.—Chosroes. For the description of his Throne or Palace, see Gibbon and D'Herbelot. There were said to be under this Throne or Palace of Khosrou Parviz a hundred vaults filled with "treasures so immense that some Mahometan writers tell us, their Prophet, to encourage his disciples, carried them to a rock, which, at his command, opened, and gave them a prospect through it of the treasures of Khosrou."—("Universal History.")

P. 94.—The heron crest that shone.—"The crown of Gerashid is cloudy and tarnished before the heron tuft of thy turban."—(From one of the elegies or songs in praise of Ali, written in characters of gold round the gallery of Abba's tomb.)—See Chardin.

P. 94.—Ali's beauteous eyes.—The beauty of Ali's eyes was so remarkable that whenever the Persians would describe anything as very lovely, they say it is Ayn Hali, or the Eyes of Ali.—(Chardin.)

P. 94.—They beheld an orb.—We are not told more of this trick of the Impostor than that it was "une machine qu'il disoit être la Lune." According to Richardson, the miracle is perpetuated in Neksheb. "Nakshab, the name of a city in Transoxiana, where they say there is a well, in which the appearance of the moon is to be seen night and day."

"Il amusa pendant deux mois le peuple de la ville de Nek-scheb, en faisant sortir toutes les nuits du fond d'un puits un corps lumineux semblable à la Lune, qui portoit sa lumière jusqu'à la distance de plusieurs milles."—(D'Herbelot.) Hence the impostor was called Sazendéhmah, or the Moon-maker.

P. 95.—Had rested on the Ark.—The Shechinah, called Sakinat in the Koran.—(See Sale's Note, chap. ii.)

P. 95.—The small drum with which they count the night.—The parts of the night are made known as well by instruments of music, as by the rounds of the watchman with cries and small drums.—(See Burder's "Oriental Customs," vol. i. p. 119.)

P. 95.—The lamps that light yon lofty screen.—The Serrapurda, high screens of red cloth, stiffened with cane, used to enclose a considerable space round the royal tents.—("Notes on the Bahardanush.")

The tents of Princes were generally illuminated. Norden tells us that the tent of the Bey of Girge was distinguished from the other tents by forty lanterns being suspended before it.—(See Harmer's "Observations on Job.")

P. 95.—Like bees of Kauzeroon.—"From the groves of orange-trees at Kauzeroon the bees cull a celebrated honey."—(Morier's Travels.)

P. 97.—Bride of the fierce Nile.—"A custom still subsisting at this day seems to me to prove that the Egyptians formerly sacrificed a young virgin to the God of the Nile; for they now make a statue of earth in shape of a girl, to which they give the name of the Betrothed Bride, and throw it into the river."—(Savray.)

P. 98.—Engines of havoc.—That they knew the secret of the Greek fire among the Mussulmans early in the eleventh century, appears from Dow's "Account of Mamood I."—"When he arrived at Moultan, finding that the country of the Jits was defended by great rivers, he ordered fifteen hundred boats to be built, each of which he armed with six iron spikes, projecting from their prows and sides, to prevent their being boarded by the enemy, who were very expert in that kind of war. When he had launched this fleet, he ordered twenty archers into each boat, and five others with fire-balls, to burn the craft of the Jits, and naphtha to set the whole river on fire."

The agnee aster, too, in Indian poems the Instrument of Fire, whose flame cannot be extinguished, is supposed to signify the Greek fire. (See Wilks's "South of India," vol. i. p. 471.) And in the curious Javan Poem, the "Brata Yudha," given by Sir Stamford Raffles in his "History of Java," we find: "He aimed at the heart of Soéta with the sharp-pointed Weapon of Fire."

The mention of gunpowder as in use among the Arabians, long before its supposed discovery in Europe, is introduced by Ebn Fadhl, the Egyptian geographer, who lived in the thirteenth century. Bodies, he says, "in the form of scorpions, bound round and filled with nitrous powder, glide along, making a gentle noise; then, exploding, they lighten, as it were, and burn. But there are others which, cast into the air, stretch along like a cloud, roaring horribly, as thunder roars, and on all sides vomiting out flames, burst, burn, and reduce to cinders whatever comes in their way." The historian Ben Abdalla, in speaking of the sieges of Abulualid, in the year of the Hegira 712, says, "A fiery globe, by means of combustible matter, with a mighty noise suddenly emitted, strikes with the force of lightning, and shakes the citadel." (See the extracts from Casiri's "Biblioth. Arab. Hispan." in the Appendix to Berington's "Literary History of the Middle Ages.")

P. 98.— Red-hot globes.—The Greek fire was occasionally lent by the emperors to their allies. "It was," says Gibbon, "either launched in red-hot balls of stone and iron, or darted in arrows or javelins, twisted round with flax and tow, which had deeply imbibed the inflammable oil."

P. 98.— Discharge, as from a kindled Naphtha fount.—See Hanway's "Account of the Springs of Naphtha at Baku" (which is called by Lieutenant Pottinger "Joala Mokee," or the Flaming Mouth) taking fire and running into the sea. Dr. Cooke, in his "Journal," mentions some wells in Circassia, strongly impregnated with this inflammable oil, from which issues boiling water. "Though the weather," he adds, "was now very cold, the warmth of these wells of hot water produced near them the verdure and flowers of spring."

Major Scott Waring says, that naphtha is used by the Persians, as we are told it was in hell, for lamps.

". . . . . many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielding light
As from a sky."

P. 98.—Like those wild birds.—"At the great festival of fire, called the Sheb Sezê, they used to set fire to large bunches of dry combustibles, fastened round wild beasts and birds, which being then let loose, the air and earth appeared one great illumination; and as these terrified creatures naturally fled to the woods for shelter, it is easy to conceive the conflagrations they produced."—(Richardson's "Dissertation.")

P. 100.—Seal'd with precious musk, for those they love.—"The righteous shall be given to drink of pure wine, sealed; the seal whereof shall be musk."—(Koran, chap. lxxxiii.)

P. 102.—Demon of the Waste.—"The Afghauns believe each of the numerous solitudes and deserts of their country to be inhabited by a lonely demon, whom they call the Ghoolee Beeabau, or Spirit of the Waste. They often illustrate the wildness of any sequestered tribe, by saying, 'They are wild as the Demon of the Waste.'"—(Elphinstone's "Caubul.")

P. 104.—Fill'd with burning drugs.—"Il donna du poison dans le vin à tous ses gens, et se jeta lui-même ensuite dans une cuve pleine de drogues brûlantes et consumantes, afin qu'il ne restât rien de tous les membres de son corps, et que ceux qui restoient de sa secte pussent croire qu'il étoit monté au ciel, ce qui ne manqua pas d'arriver."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 105.—Lone Cities of the Silent.—"They have all a great reverence for burial-grounds, which they sometimes call by the poetical name of Cities of the Silent, and which they people with the ghosts of the departed, who sit each at the head of his own grave, invisible to mortal eyes."—(Elphinstone.)

P. 110.—To eat any mangoes but those of Mazagong was, of course, impossible.—"The celebrity of Mazagong is owing to its mangoes, which are certainly the best fruit I ever tasted. The parent tree, from which all those of this species have been grafted, is honoured during the fruit-season by a guard of sepoys; and, in the reign of Shah Jehan, couriers were stationed between Delhi and the Mahratta coast to secure an abundant and fresh supply of mangoes for the royal table."—(Mrs. Graham's "Journal of a Residence in India.")

P. 110.—His fine antique porcelain.—This old porcelain is found in digging, and "if it is esteemed, it is not because it has acquired any new degree of beauty in the earth, but because it has retained its ancient beauty; and this alone is of great importance in China, where they give large sums for the smallest vessels which were used under the Emperors Yan and Chun, who reigned many ages before the dynasty of Tang, at which time porcelain began to be used by the Emperors" (about the year 442).—(Dunn's "Collection of curious Observations," etc.; — a bad translation of some parts of the Lettres édifiantes et curieuses of the Missionary Jesuits.)

P. 112.—Nasser, the Arabian merchant.—"La lecture de ces Fables plaisoit si fort aux Arabes, que, quand Mahomet les entretenoit de l'Histoire de l'Ancien Testament, ils la méprisoient, lui disant que celles que Nasser leur racontoit étoient beaucoup plus belles. Cette préférence attira à Nasser la malédiction de Mahomet et de tous ses disciples."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 112.—The blacksmith's apron converted into a banner.—The blacksmith Gao, who successfully resisted the tyrant Zohak, and whose apron became the Royal Standard of Persia.

P. 114.—That sublime bird, which flies always in the air.—"The Huma, a bird peculiar to the East. It is supposed to fly constantly in the air, and never touch the ground; it is looked upon as a bird of happy omen; and that every head it overshades will in time wear a crown."—(Richardson.)

In the terms of alliance made by Fuzzel Oola Khan with Hyder in 1760, one of the stipulations was, "that he should have the distinction of two honorary attendants standing behind him, holding fans composed of the feathers of the Humma, according to the practice of his family."—(Wilks's "South of India.") He adds in a note:—"The Humma is a fabulous bird. The head over which its shadow once passes will assuredly be circled with a crown. The splendid little bird suspended over the throne of Tippoo Sultaun, found at Seringapatam in 1799, was intended to represent this poetical fancy."

P. 114.—Words like those on the Written Mountain.—"To the pilgrims to Mount Sinai we must attribute the inscriptions, figures, etc., on those rocks, which have from thence acquired the name of the Written Mountain."—(Volney.) M. Gebelin and others have been at much pains to attach some mysterious and important meaning to these inscriptions; but Niebuhr, as well as Volney, thinks that they must have been executed at idle hours by the travellers to Mount Sinai, "who were satisfied with cutting the unpolished rock with any pointed instrument; adding to their names and the date of their journeys some rude figures, which bespeak the hand of a people but little skilled in tho arts."—(Niebuhr.)

P. 115.—Like the Old Man of the Sea.—The Story of Sinbad.

P. 115.—Hafez compares his mistress's hair.—See Nott's "Hafez," Ode v.

P. 115.—The Cámalatá.—"The Cámalatá (called by Linnæus, Ipomæa) is the most beautiful of its order, both in the colour and form of its leaves and flowers; its elegant blossoms are 'celestial rosy red, Love's proper hue,' and have justly procured it the name of Cámalatá, or Love's Creeper. . . .

"Cámalatá may also mean a mythological plant by which all desires are granted to such as inhabit the heaven of Indra; and if ever flower was worthy of Paradise, it is our charming Ipomæa."—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 116.—That flower-loving Nymph.—"According to Father Premare, in his tract on Chinese Mythology, the mother of Fo-hi was the daughter of heaven, surnamed Flower-loving; and as the nymph was walking alone on the bank of a river, she found herself encircled by a rainbow, after which she became pregnant, and, at the end of twelve years, was delivered of a son as radiant as herself."—("Asiatic Researches.")

P. 117.—Its plane-tree Isle.—"Numerous small islands emerge from the Lake of Cashmere. One is called Char Chenaur, from the plane-trees upon it."—(Foster.)

P. 117.—The golden floods.—"The Altan Kol or Golden River of Tibet, which runs into the Lakes of Sing-su-hay, has abundance of gold in its sands, which employs the inhabitants all the summer in gathering it."—(Pinkerton's Description of Tibet.)

P. 118.—Blooms nowhere but in Paradise.—"The Brahmins of this province insist that the blue campac flowers only in Paradise."—(Sir W. Jones.) It appears, however, from a curious letter of the Sultan of Menangcabow, given by Marsden, that one place on earth may lay claim to the possession of it. "This is the Sultan, who keeps the flower champaka that is blue, and to be found in no other country but his, being yellow elsewhere."—(Marsden's "Sumatra.")

P. 118.—Flung at night from angel hands.—"The Mahometans suppose that falling stars are the firebrands wherewith the good angels drive away the bad, when they approach too near the empyrean or verge of the heavens."—(Fryer.)

P. 119.—The pillars of Chilminar.—The Forty Pillars; so the Persians call the ruins of Persepolis. It is imagined by them that this palace and the edifices at Balbec were built by Genii, for the purpose of hiding in their subterraneous caverns immense treasures, which still remain there.—(See D'Herbelot and Volney.)

P. 119.—To the south of sun-bright Araby.—The Isles of Panchaia. Diodorus mentions the Isle of Panchaia, to the south of Arabia Felix, where there was a temple of Jupiter. This island, or rather cluster of isles, has disappeared, "sunk," says Grandpré, "in the abyss made by the fire beneath their foundations."—("Voyage to the Indian Ocean.")

P. 119.—The jewell'd cup of their King Jamshid.—"The cup of Jamshid, discovered, they say, when digging for the foundations of Persepolis."—(Richardson.)

P. 119.—O'er coral rocks and amber beds.—"It is not like the Sea of India, whose bottom is rich with pearls and ambergris, whose mountains of the coast are stored with gold and precious stones, whose gulfs breed creatures that yield ivory, and among the plants of whose shores are ebony, red wood, and the wood of Hairzan, aloes, camphor, cloves, sandal-wood, and all other spices and aromatics; where parrots and peacocks are birds of the forest, and musk and civet are collected upon the lands."—("Travels of Two Mohammedans.")

P. 120.—Thy Pagods and thy pillar'd shades.

"In the ground
The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow
About the mother-tree, a pillar'd shade,
High over-arch'd, and echoing walks between."—(Milton.)

For a particular description and plate of the Banyan-tree, see Cordiner's "Ceylon."

P. 120.—Thy Monarchs and their Thousand Thrones.—"With this immense treasure Mamood returned to Ghizni, and in the year 400 prepared a magnificent festival, where he displayed to the people his wealth in golden thrones and in other ornaments, in a great plain without the city of Ghizni."—(Ferishta.)

P. 120.—'Tis he of Gazna.—"Mahmood of Gazna, or Ghizni, who conquered India in the beginning of the eleventh century."—(See his history in Dow and Sir J. Malcolm.)

P. 120.—His bloodhounds he adorns with gems.—"It is reported that the hunting equipage of the Sultan Mahmood was so magnificent that he kept 400 greyhounds and bloodhounds, each of which wore a collar set with jewels, and a covering edged with gold and pearls."—("Universal History," vol. iii.)

P. 121.—For Liberty.—Objections may be made to my use of the word Liberty in this, and more especially in the story that follows it, as totally inapplicable to any state of things that has ever existed in the East; but though I cannot, of course, mean to employ it in that enlarged and noble sense which is so well understood at the present day, and, I grieve to say, so little acted upon, yet it is no disparagement to the word to apply it to that national independence, that freedom from the interference and dictation of foreigners, without which, indeed, no liberty of any kind can exist; and for which both Hindoos and Persians fought against their Mussulman invaders with, in many cases, a bravery that deserved much better success.

P. 122.—Afric's lunar Mountains.—"The Mountains of the Moon, or the Montes Lunæ of antiquity, at the foot of which the Nile is supposed to rise."—(Bruce.)

"Sometimes called," says Jackson, "Jibbel Kumrie, or the white or lunar-coloured mountains; so a white horse is called by the Arabians a moon-coloured horse."

P. 122.—The new-born Giant's smile.—"The Nile, which the Abyssinians know by the names of Abey and Alawy, or the Giant."—("Asiatic Researches," vol. i. p. 387.)

P. 122.—Her grots, and sepulchres of Kings.—See Perry's "View of the Levant" for an account of the sepulchres in Upper Thebes, and the numberless grots, covered all over with hieroglyphics, in the mountains of Upper Egypt.

P. 122.—The doves in warm Rosetta's vale.—"The orchards of Rosetta are filled with turtle-doves."—(Sonnini.)

P. 122.—The white pelicans.—Savary mentions the pelicans upon Lake Mœris.

P. 123.—Lovely date-trees bending.—"The superb date-tree, whose head languidly reclines, like that of a handsome woman overcome with sleep."—(Dafard el Hadad.)

P. 123.—Some purple-wing'd Sultana.—"That beautiful bird, with plumage of the finest shining blue, with purple beak and legs, the natural and living ornament of the temples and palaces of the Greeks and Romans, which, from the stateliness of its port, as well as the brilliancy of its colours, has obtained the title of Sultana."—(Sonnini.)

P. 124.—Only the fierce hyæna stalks.—Jackson, speaking of the plague that occurred in West Barbary, when he was there, says, "The birds of the air fled away from the abodes of men. The hyænas, on the contrary, visited the cemeteries," etc.

"Gondar was full of hyænas from the time it turned dark till the dawn of day, seeking the different pieces of slaughtered carcasses which this cruel and unclean people expose in the streets without burial, and who firmly believe that these animals are Falashta from the neighbouring mountains, transformed by magic, and come down to eat human flesh in the dark in safety."—(Bruce.)

P. 125.—Who yonder comes by stealth.—This circumstance has been often introduced into poetry,— by Vincentius Fabricius, by Darwin, and lately, with very powerful effect, by Mr. Wilson.

P. 127.—Who sings at the last his own death-lay.—"In the East, they suppose the Phœnix to have fifty orifices in his bill, which are continued to his tail; and that, after living one thousand years, he builds himself a funeral pile, sings a melodious air of different harmonies through his fifty organ pipes, flaps his wings with a velocity which sets fire to the wood, and consumes himself."—(Richardson.)

P. 128.—Their first sweet draught of glory take.—"On the shores of a quadrangular lake stand a thousand goblets, made of stars, out of which souls predestined to enjoy felicity drink the crystal wave."—(From Châteaubriand's Description of the Mahometan Paradise, in his "Beauties of Christianity.")

P. 129.— Syria's land of roses.— Richardson thinks that Syria had its name from Suri, a beautiful and delicate species of rose, for which that country has been always famous;— hence, Suristan, the Land of Roses.

P. 129.—Gay lizards, glittering on the walls.—"The number of lizards I saw one day in the great court of the Temple of the Sun at Balbec amounted to many thousands; the ground, the walls, and stones of the ruined buildings, were covered with them."—(Bruce.)

P. 130.—Shepherd's ancient reed.—"The Syrinx, or Pan's pipe, is still a pastoral instrument in Syria."—(Russel.)

P. 130.—The wild bees of Palestine.—"Wild bees, frequent in Palestine, in hollow trunks or branches of trees, and the clefts of rocks. Thus it is said (Psalm lxxxi.), 'honey out of the stony rock.'"—(Burder's "Oriental Customs.")

P. 130.—Woods, so full of nightingales.—"The river Jordan is on both sides beset with little, thick, and pleasant woods, among which thousands of nightingales warble all together."—(Thevenot.)

P. 130.—That great Temple.—The Temple of the Sun at Balbec.

P. 131.—Beautiful blue damsel-flies.—"You behold there a considerable number of a remarkable species of beautiful insects, the elegance of whose appearance and their attire procured for them the name of Damsels."—(Sonnini.)

P. 131.—A small imaret's rustic fount.—Imaret: "Hospice où on loge et nourrit, gratis, les pèlerins pendant trois jours."—(Toderini, translated by the Abbé de Cournand.) See also Castellan's "Mœurs des Othomans," tom. v. p. 145.

P. 132.—Kneels, with his forehead to the south.—"Such Turks as at the common hours of prayer are on the road, or so employed as not to find convenience to attend the mosques, are still obliged to execute that duty; nor are they ever known to fail, whatever business they are then about, but pray immediately when the hour alarms them, whatever they are about, in that very place they chance to stand on; insomuch that when a janissary, whom you have to guard you up and down the city, hears the notice which is given him from the steeples, he will turn about, stand still, and beckon with his hand, to tell his charge he must have patience for a while; when, taking out his handkerchief, he spreads it on the ground, sits cross-legged thereupon, and says his prayers, though in the open market, which having ended, he leaps briskly up, salutes the person whom he undertook to convey, and renews his journey with the mild expression of 'Ghell ghonnum ghell,' or, 'Come, dear, follow me.'"—Aaron Hill's "Travels.")

P. 134.—Egypt's land, of so healing a power.—The Nucta, or Miraculous Drop, which falls in Egypt precisely on St.

John's Day, in June, and is supposed to have the effect of stopping the plague.

P. 135.—Diamond turrets of Shadukiam.—The Country of Delight—the name of a province in the kingdom of Jinnistan, or Fairy Land, the capital of which is called the City of Jewels. Amberabad is another of the cities of Jinnistan.

P. 135.—The Tooba Tree.—The tree Tooba, that stands in Paradise, in the palace of Mahomet.—(See Sale's "Prelim. Disc.")—Tooba, says D'Herbelot, signifies beatitude, or eternal happiness.

P. 135.—The lote-tree, springing by Alla's throne.—Mahomet is described, in the 53d chapter of the Koran, as having seen the Angel Gabriel "by the lote-tree, beyond which there is no passing: near it is the Garden of Eternal Abode." This tree, say the commentators, stands in the seventh Heaven, on the right hand of the Throne of God.

P. 136.—The hundred-and-twenty thousand streams of Basra.—"It is said that the rivers or streams of Basra were reckoned in the time of Pelal ben Abi Bordeh, and amounted to the number of one hundred and twenty thousand streams."—(Ebn Haukal.)

P. 136.—Flung the jereed.—The name of the javelin with which the Easterns exercise. (See Castellan, "Mœurs des Othomans," tom. iii. p. 161.)

P. 137.—The Banyan Hospital.—"This account excited a desire of visiting the Banyan Hospital, as I had heard much of their benevolence to all kinds of animals that were either sick, lame, or infirm, through age or accident. On my arrival, there were presented to my view many horses, cows, and oxen, in one apartment; in another, dogs, sheep, goats, and monkeys, with clean straw for them to repose on. Above stairs were depositories for seeds of many sorts, and flat, broad dishes for water, for the use of birds and insects."—(Parsons's "Travels.")

It it said that all animals know the Banyans, that the most timid approach them, and that birds will fly nearer to them than to other people.—(See Grandpré.)

P. 138.—The fragrant grass near the Ganges.—"A very fragrant grass from the banks of the Ganges, near Heridwar, which in some places covers whole acres, and diffuses, when crushed, a strong odour."—(Sir W. Jones, on the Spikenard of the Ancients.)

P. 138.—No one had ever yet reached its summit.—"Near this is a curious hill, called Koh Talism, the Mountain of the Talisman, because, according to the traditions of the country, no person ever succeeded in gaining its summit."—(Kinneir.)

P. 139.—Warmed into life by the eyes alone.—"The Arabians believe that the ostriches hatch their young by only looking at them."—(P. Vanslebe, "Relat. d'Egypte.")

P. 140.—Lost them again forever.—See Sale's "Koran," note, vol. ii. p. 484.

P. 140.—Artisans in chariots.—Oriental Tales.

P. 140.—Plates of gold and silver flowers.—Ferishta. "Or rather," says Scott, upon the passage of Ferishta from which this is taken, "small coins, stamped with the figure of a flower. They are still used in India to distribute in charity, and, on occasion, thrown by the purse-bearers of the great among the populace."

P. 141.—Alley of trees.—The fine road made by the Emperor Jehan-Guire from Agra to Lahore, planted with trees on each side. This road is 250 leagues in length. It has "little pyramids or turrets," says Bernier, "erected every half league, to mark the ways, and frequent wells to afford drink to passengers, and to water the young trees."

P. 142.— The luxurious bird.— The Baya, or Indian Grosbeak.—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 142.—Multitudes of the beautiful red lotus.—"Here is a large pagoda by a tank, on the water of which float multitudes of the beautiful red lotus; the flower is larger than that of the white water-lily, and is the most lovely of the nymphæas I have seen."—(Mrs. Graham's "Journal of a Residence in India.")

P. 143.—From their Arab conquerors.—"On les voit persécutés par les Khalifes se retirer dans le montagnes du Kerman: plusieurs choisirent pour retraite la Tartarie et la Chine; d'autres s'arrêtèrent sur les bords du Gange, à l'est de Delhi."—(M. Anquetil, "Mémoires de l'Académie," tom. xxxi. p. 346.)

P. 144.—The Burning Field at Bakou.—The "Ager ardens" described by Kaempfer, "Amœnitat. Exot."

P. 144.—The prey of strangers.—"Cashmere," says its historians, "had its own princes 4000 years before its conquest by Akbar in 1585. Akbar would have found some difficulty to reduce this paradise of the Indies, situated as it is within such a fortress of mountains, but its monarch, Yusef-Khan, was basely betrayed by his Omrahs."—(Pennant.)

P. 144.—Fire-worshippers.—Voltaire tells us that in his Tragedy, "Les Guèbres," he was generally supposed to have alluded to the Jansenists. I should not be surprised if this story of the Fire-worshippers were found capable of a similar doubleness of application.

P. 147.—Oman's Sea.—The Persian Gulf, sometimes so called, which separates the shores of Persia and Arabia.

P. 147.—Harmozia's walls.—The present Gombaroon, a town on the Persian side of the Gulf.

P. 147.—The clash of zel.—A Moorish instrument of music.

P. 147.—The wind-tower on the Emir's dome.—"At Gombaroon and other places in Persia, they have towers for the purpose of catching the wind, and cooling the houses.—(LeBruyn.)

P. 148.—Iran's name.—"Iran is the true general name for the empire of Persia."—("Asiatic Researches," Disc. 5.)

P. 148.—Engraven on his reeking sword.—"On the blades of their scimitars some verse from the Koran is usually inscribed."—(Russel.)

P. 148.—Draw venom forth that drives men mad.—"There is a kind of Rhododendron about Trebizond whose flowers the bee feeds upon, and the honey thence drives people mad." —(Tournefort.)

P. 150.— Upon the turban of a king.—"Their kings wear plumes of black herons' feathers upon the right side as a badge of sovereignty."—(Hanway.)

P. 150.— Springing in a desolate mountain.—"The Fountain of Youth, by a Mahometan tradition, is situated in some dark region of the East."—(Richardson.)

P. 151.—Yemen's dales.— Arabia Felix.

P. 151.— Lull'd in cool kiosk or bower.—"In the midst of the garden is the chiosk, that is, a large room, commonly beautified with a fine fountain in the midst of it. It is raised nine or ten steps, and enclosed with gilded lattices, round which vines, jessamines, and honeysuckles make a sort of green wall; large trees are planted round this place, which is the scene of their greatest pleasures."—(Lady M.W. Montagu.)

P. 151.—Before their mirrors count the time.—The women of the East are never without their looking-glasses. "In Barbary," says Shaw, "they are so fond of their looking-glasses, which they hang upon their breasts, that they will not lay them aside, even when, after the drudgery of the day, they are obliged to go two or three miles with a pitcher or a goat's skin to fetch water."—(Travels.)

In other parts of Asia they wear little looking-glasses on their thumbs. "Hence (and from the lotus being considered the emblem of beauty) is the meaning of the following mute intercourse of two lovers before their parents:—

> "'He, with salute of deference due,
> A lotus to his forehead prest;
> She raised her mirror to his view,
> Then turn'd it inward to her breast.'"
> ("Asiatic Miscellany," Vol. ii.)

P. 151.—The emerald's virgin blaze.—"They say that if a snake or serpent fix his eyes on the lustre of those stones (emeralds), he immediately becomes blind."—(Ahmed ben Abdalaziz, "Treatise on Jewels.")

P. 152.—The day-beam's withering fire.—"At Gombaroon and the Isle of Ormus, it is sometimes so hot that the people are obliged to lie all day in the water."—(Marco Polo.)

P. 153.—Ararat's tremendous peak.—This mountain is generally supposed to be inaccessible. Struy says, "I can well assure the reader that their opinion is not true, who suppose this mount to be inaccessible." He adds, that "the lower part of the mountain is cloudy, misty, and dark; the middle-most part very cold, and like clouds of snow; but the upper regions perfectly calm." It was on this mountain that the Ark was supposed to have rested after the Deluge, and part of it, they say, exists there still, which Struy thus gravely accounts for:—"Whereas none can remember that the air on the top of the hill did ever change or was subject either to wind or rain, which is presumed to be the reason that the Ark has endured so long without being rotten."—(See Carreri's "Travels," where the Doctor laughs at this whole account of Mount Ararat.)

P. 153.—The bridegroom, with his locks of light.—In one of the books of the "Shah Nâmeh," when Zal (a celebrated hero of Persia, remarkable for his white hair) comes to the terrace of his mistress Rodahver at night, she lets down her long tresses to assist him in his ascent;—he, however, manages it in a less romantic way, by fixing his crook in a projecting beam.—(See Champion's "Ferdosi.")

P. 154.—The rock-goats of Arabia clamber.—"On the lofty hills of Arabia Petræa are rock-goats."—(Niebuhr.)

P. 154.—Some ditty to her soft Kanoon.—"Canun, espèce de psaltérion, avec des cordes de boyaux; les dames en touchent dans le sérail, avec des écailles armées de pointes de cooc."—(Toderini, translated by De Cournand.)

P. 159.—The Gheber belt that roung him clung.—"They (the Ghebers) lay so much stress on their cushee or girdle, as not to dare to be an instant without it."—(Grose's Voyage.) "Le jeune homme nia d'abord la chose; mais, ayant éte dépouillé de sa robe, et la large ceinture qu'il portoit comme Ghebr," etc., etc.—(D'Herbelot, art. "Agduani.") "Pour se distinguer des Idolâtres de l'Inde, les Guèbres se ceignent tous d'un cordon de laine, ou de poil de chameau."—("Encyclopédie Françoise.") D'Herbelot says this belt was generally of leather.

P. 159.—The living lights of heaven.—"They suppose the Throne of the Almighty is seated in the sun, and hence their worship of that luminary."—(Hanway.) "As to fire, the Ghebers place the spring-head of it in that globe of fire, the Sun, by them called Mythras, or Mihir, to which they pay the highest reverence, in gratitude for the manifold benefits flowing from its ministerial omniscience. But they are so far from confounding the subordination of the Servant with the majesty of its Creator, that they not only attribute no sort of sense or reasoning to the sun or fire, in any of its operations, but consider it as a purely passive blind instrument, directed and governed by the immediate impression on it of the will of God: but they do not even give that luminary, all-glorious as it is, more than the second rank amongst His works, reserving the first for that stupendous production of divine power, the mind of man."—(Grose.) The false charges brought against the religion of these people by their Mussulman tyrants is but one proof among many of the truth of this writer's remark, that "calumny is often added to oppression, if but for the sake of justifying it."

P. 161.—And fiery darts, at intervals.—"The Mameluks that were in the other boat, when it was dark, used to shoot up a sort of fiery arrows into the air, which in some measure resembled lightning or falling stars."—(Baumgarten.)

P. 163.—The tomb of the musician, Tan-Sein.—"Within the enclosure which surrounds this monument (at Gualior) is a small tomb to the memory of Tan-Sein, a musician of incomparable skill, who flourished at the court of Akbar. The tomb is overshadowed by a tree concerning which a superstitious notion prevails, that the chewing of its leaves will give an extraordinary melody to the voice."—("Narrative of a Journey from Agra to Ouzein," by W. Hunter, Esq.)

P. 163.—The awful signal of the bamboo staff.—"It is usual to place a small white triangular flag, fixed to a bamboo staff of ten or twelve feet long, at the place where a tiger has destroyed a man. It is common for the passengers also to throw each a stone or brick near the spot, so that in the course of a little time a pile equal to a good wagon-load is collected. The sight of these flags and piles of stones imparts a certain melancholy, not perhaps altogether void of apprehension."—("Oriental Field Sports," vol. ii.)

P. 163.— Ornamented with the most beautiful porcelain.— "The Ficus Indica is called the Pagod Tree and Tree of Councils; the first, from the idols placed under its shade; the second, because meetings were held under its cool branches. In some places it is believed to be the haunt of spectres, as the ancient spreading oaks of Wales have been of fairies; in others are erected beneath the shade pillars of stone, or posts, elegantly carved, and ornamented with the most beautiful porcelain to supply the use of mirrors."—(Pennant.)

P. 165.—The Green Sea.—The Persian Gulf.—"To dive for pearls in the Green Sea, or Persian Gulf."—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 165.— Bahrein and Kishma.— Islands in the Gulf.

P. 165.— Selama's sainted cape.— Or Selemeh, the genuine name of the headland at the entrance of the Gulf, commonly called Cape Musseldom. "The Indians, when they pass the promontory, throw cocoa-nuts, fruits, or flowers, into the sea, to secure a propitious voyage."—(Morier.)

P. 165.—The nightingale now bends her flight.—"The nightingale sings from the pomegranate groves in the daytime, and from the loftiest trees at night."—(Russel's "Aleppo.")

P. 165.—The best and brightest scimitar.— In speaking of the climate of Shiraz, Francklin says, "The dew is of such a pure nature, that if the brightest scimitar should be exposed to it all night, it would not receive the least rust."

P. 166.— Cadessia's bloody plains.— The place where the Persians were finally defeated by the Arabs, and their ancient monarchy destroyed.

P. 166.— The Caspian's Iron Gates. — Derbend. "Les

Turcs appellent cette ville Demir Capi, Porte de Fer : ce sont les Caspiæ Portæ des anciens."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 167.—Like Zeilan's giant palm.— The Talpot or Talipot tree. "This beautiful palm-tree, which grows in the heart of the forests, may be classed among the loftiest trees, and becomes still higher when on the point of bursting forth from its leafy summit. The sheath which then envelops the flower is very large, and, when it bursts, makes an explosion like the report of a cannon."—(Thunberg.)

P. 168.—Yemen's warriors wink.—"When the bright cimitars make the eyes of our heroes wink."—("The Moallakat," poem of "Amru.")

P. 169.—Those old enchanted kings.— Tahmuras, and other ancient kings of Persia; whose adventures in Fairy-land among the Peris and Dives may be found in Richardson's curious Dissertation. The griffin Simoorgh, they say, took some feathers from her breast for Tahmuras, with which he adorned his helmet, and transmitted them afterwards to his descendants.

P. 170.—Sainted cedars on its banks.—This rivulet, says Dandini, is called the Holy River, from the "cedar saints" among which it rises. In the "Lettres Edifiantes," there is a different cause assigned for its name of Holy. "In these are deep caverns, which formerly served as so many cells for a great number of recluses, who had chosen these retreats as the only witnesses upon earth of the severity of their penance. The tears of these pious penitents gave the river of which we have just treated the name of the Holy River."—(See Châteaubriand's "Beauties of Christianity.")

P. 171.—A rocky mountain.— This mountain is my own creation, as the "stupendous chain," of which I suppose it a link, does not extend quite so far as the shores of the Persian Gulf. "This long and lofty range of mountains formerly divided Media from Assyria, and now forms the boundary of the Persian and Turkish empires. It runs parallel with the river Tigris and Persian Gulf, and almost disappearing in the vicinity of Gomberoon (Harmozia), seems once more to rise in the southern districts of Kerman, and following an easterly course through the centre of Meckraun and Balouchistan, is entirely lost in the deserts of Sinde."—(Kinneir's "Persian Empire.")

P. 172.—The sleeping albatross.—These birds sleep in the air. They are most common about the Cape of Good Hope.

P. 172.—The Gheber's lonely cliff.—"There is an extraordinary hill in this neighbourhood, called Kohé Gubr, or the Guebre's mountain. It rises in the form of a lofty cupola, and on the summit of it, they say, are the remains of an Atush Kudu, or Fire-Temple. It is superstitiously held to be the residence of Deeves or Sprites, and many marvellous stories are recounted of the injury and witchcraft suffered by those who essayed in former days to ascend or explore it."—(Pottinger's "Beloochistan.")

P. 173.—Stood on fire.—The Ghebers generally built their temples over subterraneous fires.

P. 173.—Still did the mighty flame burn on.—"At the city of Yezd, in Persia, which is distinguished by the appellation of the Darûb Abadut, or Seat of Religion, the Guebres are permitted to have an Atush Kudu, or Fire-Temple (which, they assert, has had the sacred fire in it since the days of Zoroaster), in their own compartment of the city; but for this indulgence they are indebted to the avarice, not the tolerance, of the Persian government, which taxes them at twenty-five rupees each man."—(Pottinger's "Beloochistan.")

P. 174.—The blood of Zal and Rustam.—Ancient heroes of Persia. "Among the Guebres there are some who boast their descent from Rustam."—(Stephens's "Persia.")

P. 175.—The dark sea-robber's way.—See Russel's account of the panther's attacking travellers in the night on the seashore about the roots of Lebanon.

P. 175.—Wandering Spirits of their Dead.—"Among other ceremonies the Magi used to place upon the tops of high towers various kinds of rich viands, upon which it was supposed the Peris and the spirits of their departed heroes regaled themselves."—(Richardson.)

P. 175.—Charmed leaf of pure pomegranate.—In the ceremonies of the Ghebers round their Fire, as described by Lord, "the Daroo," he says, "giveth them water to drink, and a pomegranate leaf to chew in the mouth, to cleanse them from inward uncleanness."

P. 175.—Symbol of their worshipp'd planet.—"Early in the morning, they (the Parsees or Ghebers at Oulam) go in crowds to pay their devotions to the Sun, to whom upon all the altars there are spheres consecrated, made by magic, resembling the circles of the sun, and when the sun rises these orbs seem to be inflamed, and to turn round with a great noise. They have every one a censer in their hands, and offer incense to the sun."—(Rabbi Benjamin.)

P. 175.—The latest, holiest deed.—"Nul d'entre eux oseroit se parjurer, quand il a pris à témoin cet élément terrible et vengeur."—("Encyclopédie Françoise.")

P. 176.—The Persian lily shines and towers.—"A vivid verdure succeeds the autumnal rains, and the ploughed fields are covered with the Persian lily, of a resplendent yellow colour."—(Russel's "Aleppo.")

P. 179.—The sparkle upon Herkend's Sea.—"It is observed, with respect to the Sea of Herkend, that when it is tossed by tempestuous winds it sparkles like fire."—("Travels of Two Mohammedans.")

P. 179.—The Kerna's breath.—A kind of trumpet; it was "that used by Tamerlane, the sound of which is described as uncommonly dreadful, and so loud as to be heard at the distance of several miles."—(Richardson.)

P. 180.—Ohod's field of death.—"Mohammed had two helmets, an interior and an exterior one; the latter of which, called Al Mawashah, the fillet, wreath, or wreathed garland, he wore at the battle of Ohod."—("Universal History.")

P. 181.—Turn to ashes on the lips.—"They say there are apple-trees upon the sides of this sea, which bear very lovely fruit, but within are all full of ashes."—(Thevenot.) The same is asserted of the oranges there. (See Witman's "Travels in Asiatic Turkey.")

"The Asphalt Lake, known by the name of the Dead Sea, is very remarkable on account of the considerable proportion of salt which it contains. In this respect it surpasses every other known water on the surface of the earth. This great proportion of bitter-tasted salts is the reason why neither animal nor plant can live in this water."—(Klaproth's "Chemical Analysis of the Water of the Dead Sea," Annals of Philosophy, January, 1813.) Hasselquist, however, doubts the truth of this last assertion, as there are shell-fish to be found in the lake.

Lord Byron has a similar allusion to the fruits of the Dead Sea, in that wonderful display of genius, his third canto of "Childe Harold,"—magnificent beyond anything, perhaps, that even he has ever written.

P. 181.—Lakes that shone in mockery nigh.—"The Suhrab, or Water of the Desert, is said to be caused by the rarefaction of the atmosphere from extreme heat; and, which augments the delusion, it is most frequent in hollows, where water might be expected to lodge. I have seen bushes and trees reflected in it with as much accuracy as though it had been the face of a clear and still lake."—(Pottinger.)

"As to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until when he cometh thereto he findeth it to be nothing."—(Koran, chap. xxiv.)

P. 183.—The Bid-musk.—"A wind which prevails in February, called Bidmusk, from a small and odoriferous flower of that name."—"The wind which blows these flowers commonly lasts till the end of the month."—(Le Bruyn.)

P. 183.—Sea-gipsies, who live forever on the water.—"The Biajús are of two races: the one is settled on Borneo, and are a rude but warlike and industrious nation, who reckon themselves the original possessors of the Island of Borneo. The other is a species of sea-gipsies or itinerant fishermen, who live in small covered boats, and enjoy a perpetual summer on the Eastern Ocean, shifting to leeward from island to island, with the variations of the monsoon. In some of their customs this singular race resemble the natives of the Maldivia islands. The Maldivians annually launch a small bark, loaded with perfumes, gums, flowers, and odoriferous wood, and turn it adrift at the mercy of winds and waves, as an offering to the Spirit of the Winds; and sometimes similar offerings are made to the spirit whom they term the King of the Sea. In like manner the Biajús perform their offering to the God of Evil, launching a small bark, loaded with all the sins and misfortunes of the nation, which are imagined to fall on the unhappy crew that may be so unlucky as first to meet with it." —(Dr. Leyden on the Languages and Literature of the Indo-Chinese Nations.)

P. 183.—The violet sherbets.—"The sweet-scented violet is one of the plants most esteemed, particularly for its great use in Sorbet, which they make of violet sugar."—(Hasselquist.)

"The sherbet they most esteem, and which is drunk by the Grand Signor himself, is made of violets and sugar."—(Tavernier.)

P. 183.—The pathetic measure of Nava.—"Last of all she took a guitar, and sung a pathetic air in the measure called Nava, which is always used to express the lamentations of absent lovers."—("Persian Tales.")

P. 185.—No music timed her parting oar.—"The Easterns used to set out on their longer voyages with music."—(Harmer.)

P. 185.—The Gate of Tears.—"The Gate of Tears, the straits or passage into the Red Sea, commonly called Babelmandel. It received this name from the old Arabians, on account of the danger of the navigation, and the number of shipwrecks by which it was distinguished; which induced them to consider as dead, and to wear mourning for, all who had the boldness to hazard the passage through it into the Ethiopic ocean."—(Richardson.)

P. 185.—In the still warm and living breath.—"I have been told that whensoever an animal falls down dead, one or more vultures, unseen before, instantly appear."—(Pennant.)

P. 185.—A young bird of Babylon.—"They fasten some writing to the wings of a Bagdat or Babylonian pigeon."—("Travels of Certain Englishmen.")

P. 186.—Around their jasper fount.—"The Empress of Jehan-Guire used to divert herself with feeding tame fish in her canals, some of which were many years afterwards known by fillets of gold, which she caused to be put round them."—(Harris.)

P. 186.—To tell her ruby rosary.—"Le Tespih, qui est un chapelet composé de 99 petites boules d'agate, de jaspe, d'ambre, de corail, ou d'autre matière précieuse. J'en ai vu un superbe au Seigneur Jerpos; il étoit de belles et grosses perles parfaites et égales, estimé trente mille piastres."—(Toderini.)

P. 189.—Like meteor brands.—The meteors that Pliny calls "faces."

P. 189.—The Star of Egypt.—"The brilliant Canopus, unseen in European climates."—(Brown.)

P. 189.—The White Islands of the West.—See Wilford's learned Essays on the Sacred Isles of the West.

P. 190.—That lightning-gem.—A precious stone of the Indies, called by the ancients Cerauneum, because it was supposed to be found in places where thunder had fallen. Tertullian says it has a glittering appearance, as if there had been fire in it; and the author of the "Dissertation" in Harris's "Voyages" supposes it to be the opal.

P. 192.—Their garb.—D'Herbelot, art. "Agduani."

P. 192.—Each yellow vest, that rebel hue.—"The Guebres are known by a dark yellow colour, which the men affect in their clothes."—(Thevenot.)

P. 192.—The Tartar fleece upon their caps.—"The Kolah or cap, worn by the Persians, is made of the skin of the sheep of Tartary."—(Waring.)

P. 197.—Open her bosom's glowing veil.—A frequent image among the Oriental poets. "The nightingales warbled their enchanting notes, and rent the thin veils of the rosebud and the rose."—(Jami.)

P. 200.—The sorrowful tree, Nilica.—"Blossoms of the sorrowful Nyctanthes give a durable colour to silk."—("Remarks on the Husbandry of Bengal," p. 200.) Nilica is one of the Indian names of this flower.—(Sir W. Jones.) The Persians call it Gul.—(Carreri.)

P. 201.—That cooling feast the traveller loves.—"In parts of Kerman, whatever dates are shaken from the trees by the wind, they do not touch, but leave them for those who have not any, or for travellers."—(Ebn Haukal.)

P. 202.—The Searchers of the Grave.—The two terrible angels Monkir and Nakir, who are called "the Searchers of the Grave" in the "Creed of the Orthodox Mahometans," given by Ockley, vol. ii.

P. 202.—The mandrake's charnel leaves at night.—"The Arabians call the mandrake 'the Devil's candle,' on account of its shining appearance in the night."—(Richardson.)

P. 208.—The still Halls of Ishmonie.—For an account of Ishmonie, the petrified city in Upper Egypt, where it is said there are many statues of men, women, etc., to be seen to this day, see Perry's "View of the Levant."

P. 210.—To roses turn'd the death-flames.—The Ghebers say that when Abraham, their great Prophet, was thrown into the fire by order of Nimrod, the flame turned instantly into "a bed of roses, where the child sweetly reposed."—(Tavernier.)

Of their other Prophet, Zoroaster, there is a story told in Dion Prusæus, Orat. 36, that the love of wisdom and virtue leading him to a solitary life upon a mountain, he found it one day all in a flame, shining with celestial fire, out of which he came without any harm, and instituted certain sacrifices to God, who, he declared, then appeared to him.—(See Patrick on Exodus, iii. 2.)

P. 213.—A ponderous sea-horn.—"The shell called Siian-

kos, common to India, Africa, and the Mediterranean, and still used in many parts as a trumpet for blowing alarms, or giving signals: it sends forth a deep and hollow sound."—(Pennant.)

P. 213.—The white ox-tails stream'd behind.—"The finest ornament for the horses is made of six large flying tassels of long white hair, taken out of the tails of wild oxen, that are to be found in some places of the Indies."—(Thevenot.)

P. 215.—Sweet as the angel Israfil's.—"The angel Israfil, who has the most melodious voice of all God's creatures."—(Sale.)

P. 218.—Through Golconda's vale.—See Hoole upon the "Story of Sinbad."

P. 221.—By sudden swell of Jordan's pride.—"In this thicket upon the banks of the Jordan several sorts of wild beasts are wont to harbour themselves, whose being washed out of the covert by the overflowings of the river gave occasion to that allusion of Jeremiah, 'he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan.'"—(Maundrell's "Aleppo.")

P. 228.—Like the wind of the south o'er a summer lute blowing.—"This wind (the Samoor) so softens the strings of lutes that they can never be tuned while it lasts."—(Stephens's "Persia.")

P. 228.—With nought but the sea-star to light up her tomb.—"One of the greatest curiosities found in the Persian Gulf is a fish which the English call Star-fish. It is circular, and at night very luminous, resembling the full moon surrounded by rays."—(Mirza Abu Taleb.)

P. 228.—When the merry date-season is burning.—For a description of the merriment of the date-time, of their work, their dances, and their return home from the palm-groves at the end of autumn with the fruits, see Kaempfer, "Amœnitat. Exot."

P. 229.—That ever the sorrowing sea-bird has wept.—Some naturalists have imagined that amber is a concretion of the tears of birds.—(See Trevoux, Chambers.)

P. 229.—Where the sands of the Caspian are sparkling.—"The bay Kieselarke, which is otherwise called the Golden Bay, the sand whereof shines as fire."—(Struy.)

P. 230.—The summary criticism of the Chabuk.—"The application of whips or rods."—(Dubois.)

P. 231.—Chief Holder of the Girdle of Beautiful Forms.—Kaempfer mentions such an officer among the attendants of the King of Persia, and calls him "formæ corporis æstimator." His business was, at stated periods, to measure the ladies of the Haram by a sort of regulation-girdle, whose limits it was not thought graceful to exceed. If any of them outgrew this standard of shape, they were reduced by abstinence till they came within proper bounds.

P. 231.—Forbidden River.—The Attock. "Akbar on his way ordered a fort to be built upon the Nilab, which he called Attock, which means in the Indian language, Forbidden; for, by the superstition of the Hindoos, it was held unlawful to cross that river."—(Dow's "Hindostan.")

P. 232.—One genial star that rises nightly over their heads.—"The inhabitants of this country (Zinge) are never afflicted with sadness or melancholy; on this subject the Sheikh Abu-al-Kheir-Azhari has the following distich: —

"'Who is the man without care or sorrow, (tell) that I may rub my hand to him.

"'(Behold) the Zingians, without care or sorrow, frolicsome with tipsiness and mirth.'

"The philosophers have discovered that the cause of this cheerfulness proceeds from the influence of the star Soheil or Canopus, which rises over them every night."—(Extract from a Geographical Persian Manuscript called "Heft Aklim, or the Seven Climates," translated by W. Ouseley, Esq.)

P. 233.—Those unfortunate little lizards.—"The lizard Stellio. The Arabs call it Hardun. The Turks kill it, for they imagine that by declining the head it mimics them when they say their prayers."—(Hasselquist.)

P. 233.—Royal Gardens.—For these particulars respecting

Hussun Abdaul, I am indebted to the very interesting Introduction of Mr. Elphinstone's work upon Caubul.

P. 233.—"It was too delicious."—"As you enter at that Bazar, without the gate of Damascus, you see the Green Mosque, so called because it hath a steeple faced with green glazed bricks, which render it very resplendent; it is covered at top with a pavilion of the same stuff. The Turks say this mosque was made in that place, because Mahomet being come so far, would not enter the town, saying it was too delicious." —(Thevenot.) This reminds one of the following pretty passage in Isaac Walton:—"When I sat last on this primrose bank, and looked down these meadows, I thought of them as Charles the Emperor did of the city of Florence, 'that they were too pleasant to be looked on, but only on holidays.'"

P. 233.—The Sultana Nourmahal, the Light of the Haram. —Nourmahal signifies Light of the Haram. She was afterwards called Nourjehan, or the Light of the World.

P. 234.—Haroun-al-Raschid and his fair mistress Marida. —"Haroun-al-Raschid, cinquième Khalife des Abassides, s'étant un jour brouillé avec une de ses maîtresses nommée Maridah, qu'il aimoit cependant jusqu'à l'excès, et cette mésintelligence ayant déjà duré quelque tems, commença à s'ennuyer. Giafar Barmaki, son favori, qui s'en aperçut, commanda à Abbas-ben-Ahnaf, excellent poëte de ce tems-là, de composer quelques vers sur le sujet de cette brouillerie. Ce poëte exécuta l'ordre de Giafar, qui fit chanter ces vers par Moussali en présence du Khalife, et ce prince fut tellement touché de la tendresse des vers du poëte et de la douceur de la voix du musicien, qu'il alla aussitôt trouver Maridah, et fit sa paix avec elle."—(D'Herbelot.)

P. 235.—With its roses the brightest that earth ever gave.— "The rose of Kashmire, for its brilliancy and delicacy of odour, has long been proverbial in the East."—(Forster.)

P. 235.—A zone of sweet bells.—"Tied round her waist the zone of bells, that sounded with ravishing melody."—("Song of Jayadeva.")

P. 236.—The young aspen-trees.—"The little isles in the lake of Cachemire are set with arbours and large-leaved aspen-trees, slender and tall."—(Bernier.)

P. 236.—The mountainous portal.—"The Tuckt Suliman, the name bestowed by the Mahometans on this hill, forms one side of a grand portal to the Lake."—(Forster.)

P. 236.—Feast of Roses.—"The Feast of Roses continues the whole time of their remaining in bloom." (See Pietro de la Valle.)

P. 236.—The Floweret of a hundred leaves.—"Gul sad berk, the Rose of a hundred leaves. I believe a particular species."—(Ouseley.)

P. 237.—The palms of Baramoule.—(Bernier.)

P. 237.—Bela's hills.—A place mentioned in the Toozek Jehangeery, or Memoirs of Jehan-Guire, where there is an account of the beds of saffron-flowers about Cashmere.

P. 238.—Sung from his lighted gallery.—"It is the custom among the women to employ the Maazeen to chant from the gallery of the nearest minaret, which on that occasion is illuminated, and the women assembled at the house respond at intervals with a ziraleet or joyous chorus."—(Russel.)

P. 238.—From gardens, where the silken swing.—"The swing is a favourite pastime in the East, as promoting a circulation of air, extremely refreshing in those sultry climates."—(Richardson.)

"The swings are adorned with festoons. This pastime is accompanied with the music of voices and of instruments, hired by the masters of the swings."—(Thevenot.)

P. 238.— Tents that line the way.—"At the keeping of the Feast of Roses we beheld an infinite number of tents pitched, with such a crowd of men, women, boys, and girls, with music, dances," etc., etc.—(Herbert.)

P. 239.—An answer in song to the kiss of each wave.—"An old commentator of the Chou-King says, the ancients having remarked that a current of water made some of the stones near its banks send forth a sound, they detached some of them, and being charmed with the delightful sound they emitted, constructed King or musical instruments of them." —(Grosier.)

This miraculous quality has been attributed also to the shore of Attica. "Hujus littus, ait Capella, concentum musicum illisis terræ undis reddere, quod propter tantam eruditionis vim puto dictum."—(Ludov. Vives in Augustin. de Civitat. Dei, lib. xviii. c. 8.)

P. 239.—The magnificent Son of Acbar.— Jehan-Guire was the son of the Great Acbar.

P. 240.— Peris just loosed from their cages.— In the wars of the Dives with the Peris, whenever the former took the latter prisoners "they shut them up in iron cages, and hung them on the highest trees. Here they were visited by their companions, who brought them the choicest odours."—(Richardson.)

P. 241.—The flowers of this planet.— In the Malay language the same word signifies women and flowers.

P. 241 —That City of Delight.— The capital of Shadukiam.

P. 243.— He sits, with flowerets fetter'd round.—See the representation of the Eastern Cupid, pinioned closely round with wreaths of flowers in Picart's "Cérémonies Religieuses."

P. 243.— Lose all their glory when he flies.—"Among the birds of Tonquin is a species of goldfinch, which sings so melodiously that it is called the Celestial Bird. Its wings, when it is perched, appear variegated with beautiful colours, but when it flies they lose all their splendour."—(Grosier.)

P. 243.— Whose pinion knows no resting-place.—"As these birds on the Bosphorous are never known to rest, they are called by the French 'les âmes damnées.'"—(Dalloway.)

P. 244.— If there his darling rose is not.—"You may place a hundred handfuls of fragrant herbs and flowers before the nightingale, yet he wishes not, in his constant heart, for more than the sweet breath of his beloved rose."—(Jami.)

P. 245.—The great Mantra.—"He is said to have found the great Mantra, spell or talisman, through which he ruled over the elements and spirits of all denominations."—(Wilford.)

P. 245.—The gold gems of Afric.—"The gold jewels of Jinnie, which are called by the Arabs El Herrez, from the supposed charm they contain."—(Jackson.)

P. 245.—The Siltim's harm.—"A demon, supposed to haunt woods, etc., in human shape."—(Richardson.)

P. 245.—Nourmahal.—The name of Jehan-Guire before his accession to the throne.

P. 246.—Anemones and Seas of Gold.—"Hemasagara, or the Sea of Gold, with flowers of the brightest gold color."—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 246.—Their buds on Camadeva's quiver.—"This tree (the Nagacesara) is one of the most delightful on earth, and the delicious odour of its blossoms justly gives them a place in the quiver of Camadeva, or the God of Love."—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 246.—Is call'd the Mistress of the Night.—"The Malayans style the tuberose (Polianthes tuberosa) Sandal Malam, or the Mistress of the Night."—(Pennant.)

P. 247.—That wander through Zamara's shades.—The people of the Batta country in Sumatra (of which Zamara is one of the ancient names), when not engaged in war, lead an idle, inactive life, passing the day in playing on a kind of flute, crowned with garlands of flowers, among which the globe-amaranthus, a native of the country, mostly prevails."—(Marsden.)

P. 247.—The divine Amrita tree.—"The largest and richest sort (of the Jambu, or rose-apple) is called Amrita, or immortal, and the mythologists of Tibet apply the same word to a celestial tree, bearing ambrosial fruit."—(Sir W. Jones.)

P. 247.—The basil tuft.—Sweet basil, called Rayhan in Persia, and generally found in churchyards. "The women in Egypt go, at least two days in the week, to pray and weep, at the sepulchres of the dead; and the custom then is to throw upon the tombs a sort of herb, which the Arabs call rihan, and which is our sweet basil."—(Maillet, Lett. 10.)

P. 247.—To scent the desert and the dead.—"In the Great Desert are found many stalks of lavender and rosemary."—("Asiatic Researches.")

P. 248.—Blooms on a leafless bough.—"The almond-tree, with white flowers, blossoms on the bare branches."—(Hasselquist.)

P 249.—The mountain-herb that dyes.—An herb on Mount Libanus, which is said to communicate a yellow golden hue to the teeth of the goats and other animals that graze upon it. Niebuhr thinks this may be the herb which the Eastern alchymists look to as a means of making gold. "Most of those alchymical enthusiasts think themselves sure of success, if they could but find out the herb which gilds the teeth and gives a yellow colour to the flesh of the sheep that eat it. Even the oil of this plant must be of a golden colour. It is called Haschischat ed dab."

Father Jerom Dandini, however, asserts that the teeth of the goats at Mount Libanus are of a silver colour; and adds, "This confirms to me that which I observed in Candia: to wit, that the animals that live on Mount Ida eat a certain herb which renders their teeth of a golden colour; which, according to my judgment, cannot otherwise proceed than from the mines which are underground."—(Dandini's "Voyage to Mount Libanus.")

P. 249.—Azab.—The myrrh country.

P. 249.—Where Love himself, of old, lay sleeping.—"This idea (of deities living in shells) was not unknown to the Greeks, who represent the young Nerites, one of the Cupids, as living in shells on the shores of the Red Sea."—(Wilford.)

P. 250.—Chindara's warbling fount.—"A fabulous fountain, where instruments are said to be constantly playing."—(Richardson.)

P. 251.—The cinnamon-seed from grove to grove.—"The Pompadour pigeon is the species, which, by carrying the fruit of the cinnamon to different places, is a great disseminator of this valuable tree."—(See Brown's Illustr. Tab. 19.)

P. 251.—The past, the present, and future of pleasure.—"Whenever our pleasure arises from a succession of sounds, it is a perception of a complicated nature, made up of a sensation of the present sound or note, and an idea or remembrance of the foregoing, while their mixture and concurrence produce such a mysterious delight, as neither could have produced alone. And it is often heightened by an anticipation of the succeeding notes. Thus Sense, Memory, and Imagination are conjunctively employed."—(Gerrard on Taste.)

This is exactly the Epicurean theory of Pleasure, as explained by Cicero:—"Quocirca corpus gaudere tamdiu, dum præsentem sentiat voluptatem: animum et præsentem percipere pariter cum corpore, et prospicere venientem, nec præteritam præterfluere sinere."

Madame de Staël accounts upon the same principle for the gratification we derive from rhyme:—"Elle est l'image de l'espérance et du souvenir. Un son nous fait désirer celui qui doit lui répondre, et quand le second retentit il nous rappelie celui qui vient de nous échapper."

P. 251.—That earlier dawn.—"The Persians have two mornings, the Soobhi Kazim and the Soobhi Sadig, the false and the real daybreak. They account for this phenomenon in a most whimsical manner. They say that as the sun rises from behind the Kohi Qaf (Mount Caucasus), it passes a hole perforated through that mountain, and that darting its rays through it, it is the cause of the Soobhi Kazim, or this temporary appearance of daybreak. As it ascends, the earth is again veiled in darkness, until the sun rises above the mountain and brings with it the Soobhi Sadig, or real morning."—(Scott Waring.) He thinks Milton may allude to this, when he says:

> "Ere the blabbing Eastern scout,
> The nice morn, on the Indian steep
> From her cabin'd loop-hole peep."

P. 252.—In his magnificent Shalimar.—"In the centre of the plain, as it approaches the Lake, one of the Delhi Emperors, I believe Shah Jehan, constructed a spacious garden called the Shalimar, which is abundantly stored with fruit-trees and flowering shrubs. Some of the rivulets which intersect the plain are led into a canal at the back of the garden, and flowing through its centre, or occasionally thrown into a variety of water-works, compose the chief beauty of the Shalimar. To decorate this spot, the Mogul princes of India have displayed an equal magnificence and taste; especially Jehan Gheer, who, with the enchanting Noor Mahl, made Kashmire his usual residence during the summer months. On arches thrown over the canal are erected, at equal distances, four or five suites of apartments, each consisting of a saloon, with four rooms at the angles, where the followers of the court attend, and the servants prepare sherbets, coffee, and the hookah. The frame of the doors of the principal saloon is composed of pieces of a stone of black colour, streaked with yellow lines, and of a closer grain and higher polish than porphyry. They were taken, it is said, from a Hindoo temple, by one of the Mogul princes, and are esteemed of great value."—(Forster.)

P. 253.—Beauty from its founts and streams.—"The waters of Cachemir are the most renowned from its being supposed that the Cachemirians are indebted for their beauty to them."—(Ali Yezdi.)

P. 253.—Those wandering minstrel-maids.—"From him I received the following little Gazzel, or Love Song, the notes of which he committed to paper from the voice of one of those singing girls of Cashmere, who wander from that delightful valley over the various parts of India."—("Persian Miscellanies.")

P. 253.—Delicate as the roses there.—"The roses of the Jinan Nile, or the Garden of the Nile (attached to the Emperor of Marocco's palace), are unequalled, and mattresses are made of their leaves for the men of rank to recline upon."—(Jackson.)

P. 253.—With Paphian diamonds in their locks.—"On the side of a mountain near Paphos there is a cavern which produces the most beautiful rock-crystal. On account of its brilliancy it has been called the Paphian diamond."—(Mariti.)

P. 253.— The gold meads of Candahar.—"There is a part of Candahar, called Peria, or Fairy Land."—(Thevenot.) In some of those countries to the north of India, vegetable gold is supposed to be produced.

P. 253.— Had been by magic all set flying.—"These are the butterflies which are called in the Chinese language Flying Leaves. Some of them have such shining colours, and are so variegated, that they may be called flying flowers; and indeed they are always produced in the finest flower-gardens."—(Dunn.)

P. 254.—The features of young Arab maids.—"The Arabian women wear black masks with little clasps prettily ordered."—(Carreri.) Niebuhr mentions their showing but one eye in conversation.

P. 254.— Grapes of gold.—"The golden grapes of Casbin."—(Description of Persia.)

P. 254.— And sunniest apples that Caubul.—"The fruits exported from Caubul are apples, pears, pomegranates," etc.—(Elphinstone.)

P 254.— Its thousand gardens.—"We sat down under a tree, listened to the birds. and talked with the son of our Mehmaundar about our country and Caubul, of which he gave an enchanting account: that city and its 100,000 gardens," etc.—(Elphinstone.)

P. 255.—Malaya's nectar'd mangusteen.—"The mangusteen, the most delicate fruit in the world; the pride of the Malay islands."—(Marsden.)

P. 255.—Seed of the Sun, from Iran's land.—"A delicious kind of apricot, called by the Persians Tokm-ek-shems, signifying sun's seed."—(Description of Persia.)

P. 255.—Rich conserve of Visna cherries.—"Sweetmeats in a crystal cup, consisting of rose-leaves in conserve, with lemon of Visna cherry, orange flowers," etc.—(Russel.)

P. 255.—Feed on in Erac's rocky dells.—"Antelopes, croping the fresh berries of Erac."—("The Moallakat," poem of Tarafa.)

P. 255.—Urns of porcelain from that isle.—Mauri-ga-Sima, an island near Formosa, supposed to have been sunk in the sea for the crimes of its inhabitants. The vessels which the fishermen and divers bring up from it are sold at an immense price in China and Japan.—(See Kaempfer.)

P. 255.—Amber Rosolli.—("Persian Tales.")

P. 255.—From vineyards of the Green-Sea Gushing.—The white wine of Kishma.

P. 255.—Offer'd a city's wealth.—"The King of Zeilan is said to have the very finest ruby that was ever seen. Kublai-Khan sent and offered the value of a city for it, but the King answered he would not give it for the treasure of the world." —(Marco Polo.)

P. 256.—Upon a rosy lotus wreath.—The Indians feign that Cupid was first seen floating down the Ganges on the Nymphœa Nelumbo.—(See Pennant.)

P. 256.—When warm they rise from Teflis' brooks.—Teflis is celebrated for its natural warm baths.—(See Ebn Haukal.)

P. 256.—Of a syrinda.—"The Indian Syrinda, or guitar." —(Symez.)

P. 257.—It is this, it is this.—"Around the exterior of the Dewan Khars (a building of Shah Allum's), in the cornice are the following lines in letters of gold upon a ground of white marble:—'If there be a paradise upon earth, it is this, it is this.'"—(Franklin.)

P. 257.—As the flower of the Amra just oped by a bee.— "Delightful are the flowers of the Amra trees on the mountain-tops, while the murmuring bees pursue their voluptuous toil."—(Song of Jayadeva.)

P. 257.—That rain from the sky, which turns into pearls.—"The Nisan or drops of spring rain, which they believe to produce pearls if they fall into shells."—(Richardson.)

P. 257.—Who for wine of this earth left the fountains above.—For an account of the share which wine had in the fall of the angels, see Mariti.

P. 257.—Israfil, the Angel, there.—The Angel of Music.

P. 260.—When first 't is by the lapwing found.—The Hudhud, or Lapwing, is supposed to have the power of discovering water underground.

P. 263.—Like that painted porcelain.—"The Chinese had formerly the art of painting on the side of porcelain vessels fish and other animals, which were only perceptible when the vessel was full of liquor. They call this species Kia-tsin; that is, azure is put in press. on account of the manner in which the azure is laid on."—"They are every now and then trying to recover the art of this magical painting, but to no purpose."—(Dunn.)

264.—Azor.—An eminent carver of idols, said in the Koran to be father to Abraham. "I have such a lovely idol as is not to be met with in the house of Azor."—(Hafiz.)

P. 264.—That Valley so justly called the Unequalled.—Kachmire may be Nazeer.—(Forster.)

P. 264.—Miraculous fountains.—"The pardonable superstition of the sequestered inhabitants has multiplied the places of worship of Mahadeo, of Beshan, and of Brama. All Cashmere is holy land, and miraculous fountains abound."—(Major Rennel's Memoirs of a Map of Hindostan.)

Jehan-Guire mentions "a fountain in Cashmere called Tirnagh, which signifies a snake; probably because some large snake had formerly been seen there."—"During the lifetime of my father, I went twice to this fountain, which is about twenty coss from the city of Cashmere. The vestiges of places of worship and sanctity are to be traced without number amongst the ruins and the caves which are interspersed in its neighbourhood."—(Toozek Jehangeery.) See "Asiat. Misc." vol ii.

There is another account of Cashmere by Abul-Fazil, the author of the Ayin-Acbaree, "who," says Major Rennel, "appears to have caught some of the enthusiasm of the valley, by his description of the holy places in it."

P. 264.—Roofed with flowers.—"On a standing roof of wood is laid a covering of fine earth, which shelters the building from the great quantity of snow that falls in the winter season. This fence communicates an equal warmth in winter, as a refreshing coolness in the summer season, when the tops of the houses, which are planted with a variety of flowers, exhibit at a distance the spacious view of a beautifully chequered parterre."—(Forster.)

P. 265.— The triple-coloured tortoise-shell of Pegu.—"Two hundred slaves there are who have no other office than to hunt the woods and marshes for triple-coloured tortoises for the King's Vivary. Of the shells of these also lanterns are made."—(Vincent le Blanc's Travels.)

P. 265.—Like the meteors of the north as they are seen by those hunters.—For a description of the Aurora Borealis as it appears to these hunters, see "Encyclopædia."

P. 266.— Odoriferous wind.—This wind, which is to blow from Syria Damascena, is, according to the Mahometans, one of the signs of the Last Day's approach. Another of the signs is, "Great distress in the world, so that a man when he passes by another's grave shall say, 'Would to God I were in his place!'"—(Sale's Preliminary Discourse.)

P. 268.—As precious as the Cerulean Throne of Coolburga. —"On Mohammed Shaw's return to Koolburga (the capital of Dekkan), he made a great festival, and mounted this throne with much pomp and magnificence, calling it Firozeh or Cerulean. I have heard some old persons, who saw the throne Firozeh in the reign of Sultan Mamood Bhamenee, describe it. They say that it was in length nine feet, and three in breadth; made of ebony, covered with plates of pure gold, and set with precious stones of immense value. Every prince of the house of Bhamenee, who possessed this throne, made a point of adding to it some rich stones; so that when, in the reign of Sultan Mamood, it was taken to pieces, to remove some of the jewels to be set in vases and cups, the jewellers valued it at one corore of oons (nearly four millions sterling). I learned also that it was called Firozeh from being partly enamelled of a sky-blue colour, which was in time totally concealed by the number of jewels."—(Ferishta.)
